THE WINTER BLOOMERS.

It is now time to make a first sowing of sweet peas for flowering from the end of October onwards. Sweet peas require a soil well enriched, cow manure being an excellent medium to add to the soil. If this is unprocurable, well rotted horse or sheep manure will answer well. They can be grown in either benches or on the ground in solid beds. While they will flower well in midwinter on benches, they will do much better on the ground. Furthermore, the latter system allows of much more head room, something necessary in sweet pea culture under glass. No sweet peas should have less than six feet of clear head room and eight feet is better. They will grow eight to twelve feet high, if given good soil, a suitable house and the right kind of treatment. The ideal sweet pea house should be thirty to forty feet wide, quite lofty and of any desired length. Those used by William Sim, of Cliftondale, Mass., who is probably the largest and most successful grower of these under glass, are 300 to 500 feet long and thirty to forty feet wide, the rows being run the long way of the houses, five to six feet apart.

A common error is to sow the seeds too thickly and not thin out the plants. The best plan is to sow in either small pots or flats, transplanting these to the rows when about three inches in height and allowing four to six inches between each plant. This is quite close enough, as the plants will branch out and throw stronger haulm and carry much finer flower stalks than is possible when they are sown thickly. Try both plans and be satisfied as to which is the best.

If sweet peas are grown directly in the ground, there is no necessity for changing the soil, as in the case of raised benches, provided the soil is of a generous depth and has good drainage. Each season it must be heavily manured and plowed or spaded. The latter plan is slower, but it insures the manure being placed sufficiently deep so that the roots can readily strike into it.

Suitable varieties of sweet peas for winter flowering are: Christmas Pink and Earliest of All, pink and white; Christmas White, Florence Denzer and Watchung, pure white; Mrs. George Lewis, waved white; Mrs. E. Wild, carmine; Mrs. William Sim, salmon pink. As a general rule, the pure white and pink and white varieties sell the best. Do not make the mistake of sowing the Spencer varieties now. These are not suitable for winter forcing, although they do splendidly for a late spring or early summer crop. The kinds which are popular outdoors should not be sown now.

OUTDOOR SWEET PEAS.

Now that the aster season has arrived, we can the better afford to dispense with sweet peas, but many customers will want them as long as possible. Besides, they have an odor unequaled by any other annuals. The summer has been a hot and trying one on these plants, but if they have had some water and mulching and have the roots in deep, rich soil, they should flower well for some time yet. The seed pods must be carefully removed, and it is well to pull out any dead or dying plants. Avoid, if possible, picking the flowers while damp. They will spot quickly when placed in a cold room, especially if they were warm when placed in water. Do not allow the water to reach the flowers at any time. Also avoid making large bunches of flowers tightly placed together. These, also, will spot and decay quickly.

CHINESE PRIMROSES.

What is the cause of Chinese primrose stems tapering near the leaf and finally breaking off, when the plants in other respects look healthy?

C. G. J.

You are undoubtedly growing your plants too far from the light, or too crowded; perhaps both, to allow the leaves to become as weak as they apparently are. The best place for them for the next two months will be a coldframe. Stand the pots on a bed of coal ashes. Tilt the sashes top and bottom. Shade during sunshine with cloth or lath shadings. The latter are the best. Remove sashes altogether in the evening unless heavy rain seems imminent. This treatment will result in the plants becoming stocky. They should be spaced apart once a fortnight, and at that time scratch over the surafec soil. Remove weeds and dead leaves. Spray the plants over two or three times a day, when the weather it hot and sunny. C. W.

DRY FOLIAGE AND RUST.

My chrysanthemums seem to be firming up; that is, the bottom leaves are turning brown and drying away, well up into some of the plants. These have had the best of attention. Can you kindly furnish me with a remedy for this disease?

A remedy for the rust on chrysanthemums would also be highly appreciated. G. J. W.

If the plants have made good growth and are now three feet or so high, it is nothing unusual for the bottom leaves to turn brown and dry up, particularly if the plants are getting hard and showing bark on the stem where the leaves dry up. You state that these plants have had the best of attention; therefore it would seem to me simply to be a natural ripening of the wood, rather than a disease.

If they have only been recently planted and the leaves are turning brown, it might be due to one of the fungoid diseases which attack chrysanthemums, and for which the following is an excellent remedy, as well as the best thing I know of for rust: Sulphide of potassium, used in the proportion of one ounce to two gallons of water. This is also an excellent preventive of mildew where it is prevalent.

If G. J. W. cares to write more definitely regarding the plants, stating the time they were planted, the way they have been treated, etc., I shall be pleased to answer more fully.

Chas. H. Totty.

WHEN TO TAKE BUDS.

Please tell me when buds should be taken from the following mums: Appleton, October Sunshine, Polly Rose, Dr. Enguehard, Glory of Pacific, Virginia Poehlmann and Jeanne Nonin.

J. T. L.

In answer to this query, I will give the approximate time after which it is safe to take buds on all these varieties. This does not mean that they will not come on buds taken earlier, but experience has shown in our section that the buds taken as soon as possible after the time mentioned give the best results. In the case of Enguehard and Nonin, it is assumed that they have been planted for very late work and the time has been given accordingly.

The dates are as follows: October Frost, August 10; Golden Appleton, September 1; Polly Rose, August 20; Glory of Pacific, August 20; Virginia Poehlmann, August 20; Enguehard and Nonin, September 15, or later if the plants are not throwing buds at that time. Chas. H. Totty.

TOO LATE TO PROPAGATE.

Please let me know if it is too late to propagate Coombs and Diana mums for pots, as I have a lot of good cuttings. G. H. B.

It is too late to propagate and expect profitable results; stock wanted for flowering in November should by now be sturdy young plants about ready for a shift.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Marguerites.

Look over the stock plants of marguerites in the field. Most of these, if cut back hard, will have broken away and be flowering, but if you look over the plants carefully, especially the white flowering ones, you will now be able to secure some nice, succulent cuttings without flower buds on them. These are easily rooted in an ordinary propagating bench. Pinch out the flower buds, if any appear, and keep them potted along. These will make you nice plants in February and March. Cuttings taken in spring, before the plants flowered, and still growing in pots will show a strong persistency in throwing flowers. Keep these pinched off as they appear. Do not become discouraged at the appearance of the plants. As the nights become cooler they will make more growth and at Christmas they will be in good bloom and prove useful.

Paper Whites and Romans.

The French grown bulbs are due to arrive within a few days, some being already en route. Get a number of flats of each in as soon as possible. Four inches of soil is sufficient. A cellar floor is the best place to stand them. The Romans should be kept dark. If light, cover them with a layer of ashes. The narcissi will need no such covering. A suitable place, if a cellar floor is not at command, is a coldframe, where some board shutters can be used to exclude the sun and prevent the soil drying out. Any bulbs which are not planted in the soil should be placed in a cool, dry shed or cellar until wanted. The narcissi can be had in flower early in November and Romans for Thanksgiving, although they do not sell so well while the mum tide is at its height as a little later in the season.

Trumpet Majors and Golden Spurs.

French grown bulbs of Trumpet Major and Golden Spur, as well as some of Dutch growth, are to hand unusually early this season, some large growers receiving their Golden Spurs the last week in July. By starting these now it will be quite possible to have them in flower for Christmas, at which time they are a welcome novelty and will make good prices.

Calceolarias.

It hardly pays to sow the herbaceous calceolarias during intensely hot weather. The seeds germinate poorly and are liable to damp off. Sow in a light compost, consisting largely of leaf-mold and fine sand. Make the surface smooth. Soak with water before sowing the seed. After sowing, cover with a sheet of glass and lay paper over this. Place in a coldframe facing north, or in a lean-to house facing north. Examine them every day and water through a fine rose on any signs of dryness. Remove the covering as soon as the seedlings appear and keep them close to the light. The glass where they are growing must, of course, be shaded.

To secure strong plants of the rugosa section for flowering about the end of March, take cuttings now, selecting the softest shoots. These root easily. Grow them cool and airy all the time. They will be as well outdoors until October. The variety Golden Gem is the most useful of this section. There is also a yellow hybrid between this and a yellow herbaceous form, named Stuarti, with flowers double the size of Golden Gem, which makes an excellent pot plant. Its culture is simple, being practically identical with that of Golden Gem.

A Loochoo Longiflorum.

None of the calceolarias enjoy hot weather and their rate of growth becomes much accelerated after the end of August.

Asparagus Sprengeri.

If there are any vacant benches which are intended for that ever useful plant, Asparagus Sprengeri, they should be planted with as little delay as possible, in order that there may be a good crop of shoots sufficiently well ripened before winter. A. Sprengeri is common, but it is a sure crop and quite a profitable one. It is indispensable for any country florist, for everyone who buys flowers wants some suitable green, and nothing is more useful than A. Sprengeri.

It is a good plan to grow a few large baskets of this plant and allow them to produce and ripen seeds, which can be sown as soon as ripe. Ofttimes where bench space is at a premium a dozen or two wire baskets of Sprengeri suspended from the roof will give a valuable lot of green to cut, and shoots thus grown are really harder and better than such as are bench grown.

Sprengeri likes a rich soil; one which will suit roses or mums will be found all right for it. A point worthy of remembrance is never to cut a plant off too closely at any one time. If all the shoots are removed, the plant will be seriously crippled. Always, therefore, continue to leave one or two matured shoots to each plant.

Look over old benches which are being carried over. A mulch of rotted manure will prove beneficial. Remove any old shoots which show signs of yellowing foliage. Also, do not keep the house close and moist, or many of the shoots, while thick, are liable to become moldy and damp. Just now, and for some weeks to come, fine strings are to be had outdoors, where a batch of plants was set out at the end of May. If you are short of stock these plants can be carefully lifted and benched before frost arrives.

Bouvardias.

Look over the bouvardia plants in the field and pinch back the runaway shoots. Any which are showing a tendency to lean over should have a stake. This is especially necessary with that fine, sweet-scented variety, Humboldtii corymbiflora, the shoots of which are more brittle than the smaller and later flowering sorts. The last named bouvardia can be had in flower over a long period and its large, pure white, deliciously scented flowers are welcome both now and later in the season for bouquet and design work.

THE LOOCHOO LONGIFLORUM.

From an uninhabited island in the Loochoo group, south of Japan, came the bulb from which was grown the longiflorum lily shown in the accompanying illustration. The photograph was supplied by Ralph M. Ward & Co., who say it represents a promising lily. Seitaro Arai, of Yokohama, writes of it as follows: "The appearance of these plants, leaves, etc., is quite similar to giganteum, although there are about half of green stemmed giganteum and a few much more black stemmed up to the top of the plant. The 6-inch bulbs planted there produce from fifteen to twenty or more good flowers, and the 5-inch bulbs from eight to ten." The few samples of this lily received in America last year proved to be something fine, the flower being superior to giganteum in texture and more star-shaped in appearance. The plant pictured is five feet high, has a flat stem and many flowers.

A ROCHESTER SEED FIRM.

The thoughts of many members of the trade are now drawn toward Rochester, to which, if they are fortunate enough, they will soon travel in reality as well as in thought. Their nimble imaginations are making many visits to the convention city before the actual, physical pilgrimage begins. Rochester at present is the great center of attention, and ought to be so, since they who learn most about the city and its surroundings before going to the convention are likely to derive most profit and pleasure from the trip. The Review, therefore, has recently been giving considerable space to descriptions of trade conditions at Rochester. This time the subject is the farms of the Vick & Hill Co.

The farms of the Vick & Hill Co. are located at Barnard, just north of Rochester, and are easily reached by trolley, or by the New York Central & Hudson River railroad. One of the two farms comprises thirteen acres, and on it are located the greenhouses, cellars and other buildings. On the other farm, which consists of twenty acres, are grown the asters, of which this company makes a specialty. No asters are grown for cutting purposes; the entire crop is for seed, which is grown for the florists' trade and on contract for seedsmen.

One interesting feature of the aster farm is the portion devoted to the trial of the firm's own seedlings and the standard varieties. Here may be seen a fair test of the many different varieties, growing side by side and under the same conditions. These trial beds are of great assistance to visiting florists and are freely used by them in making selections for future orders.

This company has originated and introduced many new varieties of asters, among which may be mentioned Daybreak and Purity, both of which are known to the florists the world over.

Vick & Hill's Field of Asters, Barnard, N. Y.

The main varieties of asters grown are the Early and Late Branching, both Semple's and Vick's; Early and Late Hohenzollern and others of the Comet type; the Daybreak section of eight varieties; Upright Growing; Crego; Queen of the Market, and many others.

Geraniums

GERANIUMS FOR MEMORIAL DAY.

Is there anything to be lost or gained in potting geraniums in 4-inch pots as soon as cuttings are rooted and keeping them there until their blooming period? Will the soil be of sufficient strength and what mixture of earth and fertilizers would you use in geranium culture to get the best plants for Memorial day sales? J. T. T.

It would be bad policy to put geranium cuttings, when rooted, directly into 4-inch pots. This is much too large a size for them and the probability is that many would damp off, unless watered carefully. For the best results, put the rooted cuttings first in 2-inch pots. Later give these a shift to 3-inch and later to 4-inch, in which they are flowered and sold. The various shifts mean some extra labor, but it pays to treat them thus, as it insures nice, stocky plants, which will do you credit. If you placed your geraniums in 4-inch pots, say in November, and carried them some six months in the same pots, you would have pretty miserable starvelings for Memorial day sales, no matter how well you treated them with fertilizers.

Fine bone is the best fertilizer to use in geranium compost. This keeps the wood hard and makes the plants flower freely. On the other hand, a lot of rotted cow manure will promote a rank growth of wood at the expense of flowers. A 4-inch pot of fine bone may be added to each wheelbarrow load of loam. A little old, well decayed manure can be used, but never take any that is at all fresh. Sickly plants may need stimulating occasionally with weak doses of nitrate of soda (in water) or liquid cow manure. C. W.

TROUBLE WITH GERANIUMS.

Will you kindly inform me as to what you consider is the trouble with my geraniums? They are planted outside and did finely until the last week or ten days, and then all at once the leaves became spotted and turned yellow. They have been kept quite damp and have been frequently sprinkled during sunshine. Would that hurt them? Which do you consider the best varieties of dark and medium red geraniums, next to S. A. Nutt, for bedding? C. G. J.

Your trouble has undoubtedly been caused by keeping them too damp at the root and on the foliage. The leaves

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Marguerites.

Look over the stock plants of marguerites in the field. Most of these, if cut back hard, will have broken away and be flowering, but if you look over the plants carefully, especially the white flowering ones, you will now be able to secure some nice, succulent cuttings without flower buds on them. These are easily rooted in an ordinary propagating bench. Pinch out the flower buds, if any appear, and keep them potted along. These will make you nice plants in February and March. Cuttings taken in spring, before the plants flowered, and still growing in pots will show a strong persistency in throwing flowers. Keep these pinched off as they appear. Do not become discouraged at the appearance of the plants. As the nights become cooler they will make more growth and at Christmas they will be in good bloom and prove useful.

Paper Whites and Romans.

The French grown bulbs are due to arrive within a few days, some being already en route. Get a number of flats of each in as soon as possible. Four inches of soil is sufficient. A cellar floor is the best place to stand them. The Romans should be kept dark. If light, cover them with a layer of ashes. The narcissi will need no such covering. A suitable place, if a cellar floor is not at command, is a coldframe, where some board shutters can be used to exclude the sun and prevent the soil drying out. Any bulbs which are not planted in the soil should be placed in a cool, dry shed or cellar until wanted. The narcissi can be had in flower early in November and Romans for Thanksgiving, although they do not sell so well while the mum tide is at its height as a little later in the season.

Trumpet Majors and Golden Spurs.

French grown bulbs of Trumpet Major and Golden Spur, as well as some of Dutch growth, are to hand unusually early this season, some large growers receiving their Golden Spurs the last week in July. By starting these now it will be quite possible to have them in flower for Christmas, at which time they are a welcome novelty and will make good prices.

Calceolarias.

It hardly pays to sow the herbaceous calceolarias during intensely hot weather. The seeds germinate poorly and are liable to damp off. Sow in a light compost, consisting largely of leaf-mold and fine sand. Make the surface smooth. Soak with water before sowing the seed. After sowing, cover with a sheet of glass and lay paper over this. Place in a coldframe facing north, or in a lean-to house facing north. Examine them every day and water through a fine rose on any signs of dryness. Remove the covering as soon as the seedlings appear and keep them close to the light. The glass where they are growing must, of course, be shaded.

To secure strong plants of the rugosa section for flowering about the end of March, take cuttings now, selecting the softest shoots. These root easily. Grow them cool and airy all the time. They will be as well outdoors until October. The variety Golden Gem is the most useful of this section. There is also a yellow hybrid between this and a yellow herbaceous form, named Stuarti, with flowers double the size of Golden Gem, which makes an excellent pot plant. Its culture is simple, being practically identical with that of Golden Gem.

A Loochoo Longiflorum.

None of the calceolarias enjoy hot weather and their rate of growth becomes much accelerated after the end of August.

Asparagus Sprengeri.

If there are any vacant benches which are intended for that ever useful plant, Asparagus Sprengeri, they should be planted with as little delay as possible, in order that there may be a good crop of shoots sufficiently well ripened before winter. A. Sprengeri is common, but it is a sure crop and quite a profitable one. It is indispensable for any country florist, for everyone who buys flowers wants some suitable green, and nothing is more useful than A. Sprengeri.

It is a good plan to grow a few large baskets of this plant and allow them to produce and ripen seeds, which can be sown as soon as ripe. Ofttimes where bench space is at a premium a dozen or two wire baskets of Sprengeri suspended from the roof will give a valuable lot of green to cut, and shoots thus grown are really harder and better than such as are bench grown.

Sprengeri likes a rich soil; one which will suit roses or mums will be found all right for it. A point worthy of remembrance is never to cut a plant off too closely at any one time. If all the shoots are removed, the plant will be seriously crippled. Always, therefore, continue to leave one or two matured shoots to each plant.

Look over old benches which are being carried over. A mulch of rotted manure will prove beneficial. Remove any old shoots which show signs of yellowing foliage. Also, do not keep the house close and moist, or many of the shoots, while thick, are liable to become moldy and damp. Just now, and for some weeks to come, fine strings are to be had outdoors, where a batch of plants was set out at the end of May. If you are short of stock these plants can be carefully lifted and benched before frost arrives.

Bouvardias.

Look over the bouvardia plants in the field and pinch back the runaway shoots. Any which are showing a tendency to lean over should have a stake. This is especially necessary with that fine, sweet-scented variety, Humboldtii corymbiflora, the shoots of which are more brittle than the smaller and later flowering sorts. The last named bouvardia can be had in flower over a long period and its large, pure white, deliciously scented flowers are welcome both now and later in the season for bouquet and design work.

Your trouble has undoubtedly been caused by keeping them too damp at the root and on the foliage. The leaves will sometimes turn yellow in this way during spells of hot, sunless and humid weather. There is no need for constant wetting of the soil about geraniums. If you must water, give the plants a thorough soaking; then on the following day loosen the surface soil and do not water again for a week. Treated thus your plants will grow and flower well, but constant wetting of the soil keeps it in a hard, baked condition, while damping over of the leaves does no good at all, but helps to create a soft growth, which falls an easy prey to fungoid diseases.

A few other excellent double bedding geraniums, in addition to S. A. Nutt, are: Alphonse Ricard, E. H. Trego, dazzling scarlet on saffron ground; John Doyle, deep scarlet; General Grant, a good old sort, vermilion scarlet.

MEALY BUGS.

Will you kindly tell me what to do to get rid of mealy bugs in a carnation house? I have taken out the old plants, but am waiting to hear from you before taking out the old soil, which is badly infested with these pests. Do you advise fumigating, and with what?

S. J. F.

I have never been troubled with mealy bugs in the soil, my experience with this pest being limited to their sucking on the plants. There are several preparations on the market which are supposed to destroy them effectually. I have found kerosene emulsion quite effective, but it must be prepared carefully, as it will burn the plants if not well mixed.

After you have taken out all the soil, you can fumigate your house with sulphur, which should destroy them. If your house contains other stock, so that the fumigating would be impracticable, then spray all the woodwork, from the eaves down, with kerosene.

If the pest is really in the soil, then I would advise you to write to the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., for Farmers' Bulletin No. 145. This gives directions for applying carbon bisulphide for the destruction of all underground insects. A. F. J. B.

BENCH-GROWN ENCHANTRESS.

Under separate cover we send an average carnation plant from a bench of about 125. They were planted directly into the bench from small pots during the first week in June, and were topped about the time they were planted in the bench. They do not seem to be strong plants. Do you think they will make anything for winter blooming or would you advise us to throw them out and buy field-grown plants to be put in their place? If so, could we winter them in coldframes for blooming next summer, or save the plants in any other way which would give us some profit? The variety is Enchantress, and as we are rather limited in capacity, we shall need every Enchantress bloom we can grow. W. S. G.

If the plant forwarded is an average one, you need have no fear that you will not have a good yield of blooms by next winter. The plant now carries five good shoots, two of which are ready to top. When these break again, you will have nine shoots to come along to flower.

You will find generally that plants grown indoors will not be as large, or carry quite as many shoots by August 1, as plants grown in the field. They have, however, the advantage of being established, and by September 15 there will be little difference in the size of the plants. The difference is usually in favor of the field-grown stock.

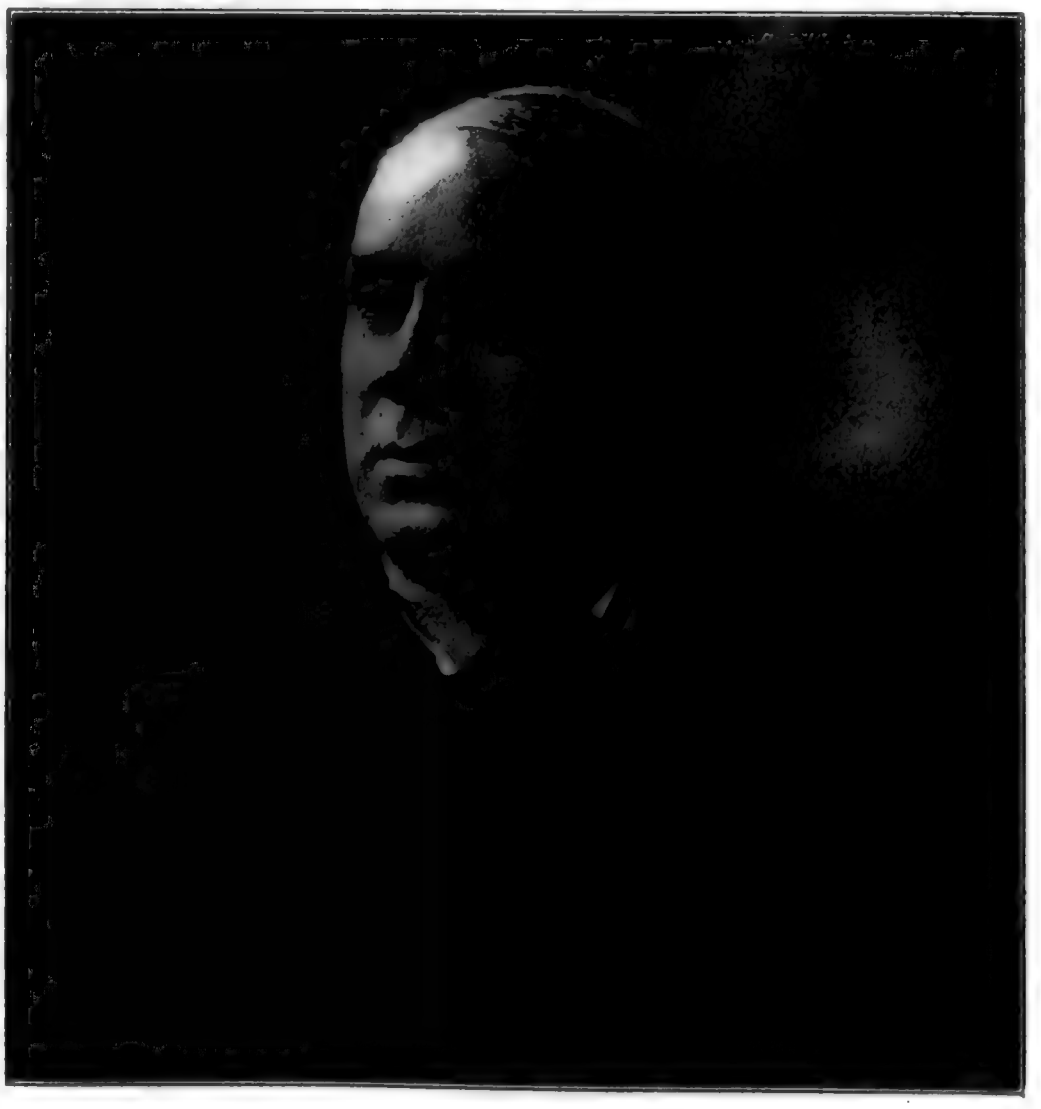
CLEANING INFECTED HOUSES.

Two years ago fairy ring, and last year stigmonose, played havoc with my carnations. Just now I am house-cleaning, and will whitewash the walls and benches and fumigate with sulphur. The soil I intend to use is top soil, mixed about a month ago with one-third cow manure. It will be turned over once or twice and lastly mixed with air-slaked lime, a bushel to six loads of soil. The carnation plants I will buy from a reputable, successful grower, so as to have new, healthy plants and a clean house to begin with. Is there anything else you could suggest that I can do to avoid these two dreadful diseases, as I am a firm believer in the ounce of prevention being worth more than a pound of cure?



P. C. M.

There is one thing more I would suggest to you, and that is to get some Bordeaux mixture. About two or three weeks after you bench your carnations, spray them thoroughly with it, to prevent the spread of any spot disease which may have started while you were spraying freely right after benching the plants. You can get it in a handy, condensed liquid form from your supply man. A gallon of it will go a long way, if you have an automatic sprayer.

ABRAHAM MOLTZ.

Abraham Moltz, of the firm of A. Moltz & Co., in the Coogan building, New York city, has had an experience of over twenty years in the trade. Since taking his nephew, Maurice L. Glass, into partnership, he has enlarged his store and increased his force of helpers, and is evidently anticipating a big addition to his sales. He asserts that he never has filled a retail order, and at the same time has the unique record of never having sold a flower for a grower. His purchases on some days are enormous. He has a genius for legitimate speculation and takes many risks, but always lands on his feet. He has the general good will of the whole-salers and buys from all of them. There will be an opportunity to look him over at the Rochester convention.

RICHARD EICHLING.

Richard Eichling, the newly-elected president of the New Orleans Horticultural Society, comes from an old family of florists. His grandfather held the position as head gardener at the estate of the count of Leininger, in Kirchheimbolanden, Rheinpfalz, Germany, at the end of the eighteenth century, and his father was the pioneer florist in Kaiserlautern, in the same domain, where Mr. Eichling was born. He learned the trade in Europe and traveled there extensively, perfecting his knowledge of growing and designing.

Coming to America twenty years ago, he resided for four years in New Orleans. The next four years, 1894 to 1898, he spent in the northern states, visiting different trade centers there and working at various large establishments. Then he returned to the Crescent City and accepted a position as manager of U. J. Virgin's nursery, retaining that position ever since and winning, in an unusual degree, the confidence of his employer and the esteem of his fellow workmen. During the last ten years he has been an active member of the New Orleans Horticultural Society, laboring zealously to promote its welfare. It is generally agreed that the society could not have chosen a better man for the presidency.

In fraternal orders Mr. Eichling is well known, being a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias and a past noble arch of the Order of Druids.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Business showed a decline last week as compared with its predecessor, due in large measure to the hot weather which prevailed, and the first week in August finds trade quiet. Roses are not abundant, but are ample for all requirements. A few nice Beauties are still seen, while Kaiserin is good. Quite a number of Killarney and White Killarney also are coming. Carnations are growing beautifully less. Few of them are of even decent quality. Another week or two will end the old crop. It will not be long before some of the new crop arrives. Asters are coming in more freely and prices on these have dropped considerably, some going as low as 50 cents per hundred. Sweet peas are not of good quality, but a fair number are arriving, with prices not showing much change.

Lilium longiflorum is plentiful. Many of the flowers are outdoor grown and of fine quality. Gladioli are abundant, America still remaining the leader. Supplies of lily of the valley are small, but the trade for it is now light. Cosmos is in good supply, while there is a considerable variety of outdoor flowers to be seen. The call for green stock remains quiet.

Club Picnic.

Glorious weather once more favored the Gardeners' and Florists' Club on the occasion of the picnic at Pine Banks park, Malden, July 27, and the attendance, considerably in excess of 500, was the largest seen on any similar occasion. The sports, as usual, excited great interest and there were strong entries in almost every class. Pine Banks park made an ideal place for a picnic. The park itself is picturesque, while the sports fields are roomy and afforded ample space for all the athletic events. This year for the first time the commercial team managed to beat the private gardeners at baseball, but when it came to the last and most strenuous event of the day, the tug of war, the private gardeners had no trouble in turning the tables on their opponents. Last year the commercial team won this contest for the first time, but on the present occasion the privates pulled the commercials four feet over the line and held them there, in spite of desperate efforts to regain the lost ground.

The list of sporting events and the winners was as follows:

Baseball, Commercials vs. Private Gardeners, won by Commercials, 5 to 3. The winning team consisted of Solari, Sim, Kuer, O'Brien, Filson, Palmer, Walsh, Aylward and Ruane; umpires, J. L. Miller and E. Holmes.

Picnic Pickings.

Mrs. Peter Fisher, Mrs. Kenneth Finlayson and M. A. Patten officiated as the judges of babies. We heard no criticism of their awards, for they wisely gave prizes to all entrants.

Abraham Moltz, of the firm of A. Moltz & Co., in the Coogan building, New York city, has had an experience of over twenty years in the trade. Since taking his nephew, Maurice L. Glass, into partnership, he has enlarged his store and increased his force of helpers, and is evidently anticipating a big addition to his sales. He asserts that he never has filled a retail order and at the same time has the unique record of never having sold a flower for a grower. His purchases on some days are enormous. He has a genius for legitimate speculation and takes many risks, but always lands on his feet. He has the general good will of the whole sellers and buys from all of them. There will be an opportunity to look him over at the Rochester convention.

RICHARD EICHLING.

Richard Eichling, the newly-elected president of the New Orleans Horticultural Society, comes from an old family of florists. His grandfather held the position as head gardener at the estate of the count of Leininger, in Kirchheimbolanden, Rheinpfalz, Germany, at the end of the eighteenth century, and his father was the pioneer florist in Kaiserlautern, in the same domain, where Mr. Eichling was born. He learned the trade in Europe and traveled there extensively, perfecting his knowledge of growing and designing.

Coming to America twenty years ago, he resided for four years in New Orleans. The next four years, 1894 to 1898, he spent in the northern states, visiting different trade centers there and working at various large establishments. Then he returned to the Crescent City and accepted a position as manager of U. J. Virgin's nursery, retaining that position ever since and winning, in an unusual degree, the confidence of his employer and the esteem of his fellow workmen. During the last ten years he has been an active member of the New Orleans Horticultural Society, laboring zealously to promote its welfare. It is generally agreed that the society could not have chosen a better man for the presidency.

In fraternal orders Mr. Eichling is well known, being a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias and a past noble arch of the Order of Druids.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Business showed a decline last week as compared with its predecessor, due in large measure to the hot weather which prevailed, and the first week in August finds trade quiet. Roses are not abundant, but are ample for all requirements. A few nice Beauties are still seen, while Kaiserin is good. Quite a number of Killarney and White Killarney also are coming. Carnations are growing beautifully less. Few of them are of even decent quality. Another week or two will end the old crop. It will not be long before some of the new crop arrives. Asters are coming in more freely and prices on these have dropped considerably, some going as low as 50 cents per hundred. Sweet peas are not of good quality, but a fair number are arriving, with prices not showing much change.

Lilium longiflorum is plentiful. Many of the flowers are outdoor grown and of fine quality. Gladioli are abundant, America still remaining the leader. Supplies of lily of the valley are small, but the trade for it is now light. Cosmos is in good supply, while there is a considerable variety of outdoor flowers to be seen. The call for green stock remains quiet.

Club Picnic.

Glorious weather once more favored the Gardeners' and Florists' Club on the occasion of the picnic at Pine Banks park, Malden, July 27, and the attendance, considerably in excess of 500, was the largest seen on any similar occasion. The sports, as usual, excited great interest and there were strong entries in almost every class. Pine Banks park made an ideal place for a picnic. The park itself is picturesque, while the sports fields are roomy and afforded ample space for all the athletic events. This year for the first time the commercial team managed to beat the private gardeners at base ball, but when it came to the last and most strenuous event of the day, the tug of war, the private gardeners had no trouble in turning the tables on their opponents. Last year the commercial team won this contest for the first time, but on the present occasion the privates pulled the commercials four feet over the line and held them there, in spite of desperate efforts to regain the lost ground.

The list of sporting events and the winners was as follows:

Baseball, Commercials vs. Private Gardeners, won by Commercials, 5 to 3. The winning team consisted of Solari, Sim, Kuer, O'Brien, Filson, Palmer, Walsh, Aylward and Ruane; umpires, J. L. Miller and E. Holmes.

Baseball boys, Westwood's team beat Hall's team, 8 to 3.

Hundred-yard race, handicap, first heat, William Hiffe, W. J. Collins, J. Comerford, eight ran; second heat, T. S. Brown, Harry Coles, six ran; final heat, William Hiffe, T. S. Brown.

Hundred-yard race, boys under 15, Thomas Hiffe, first; Thomas Lally, second; Arthur Whyte, third; twelve ran.

Fifty-yard race, handicap, married ladies, Mrs. Fred Coles, first; Mrs. Harry Woods, second; Mrs. John Kirkegaard, third; six ran.

Quoit match, D. Finlayson, first; William Munro, second; K. Finlayson, third; sixteen entries.

Fifty-yards, handicap, girls under 8, Marion Hiffe, first; Frances Terry, second; Freda Fisher, third; fourteen ran.

High jump, J. Comerford, five feet and one inch; W. J. Collins, second; eight entries.

Flag race, girls under 15, first heat, Margaret Hiffe, first; Martha Lally, second; second heat, Edith Hiffe, first; Maud Hall, second; third heat, Freda Fisher, first; Ethel Fisher, second; final heat, Martha Lally, first; Edith Hiffe, second; sixteen entries.

Putting sixteen pound shot, J. Comerford, first thirty six feet and eight inches, John Reid, second; W. McGillivray, third. The winner later made an exhibition throw of thirty-eight feet and three inches.

Flag race, married ladies, Mrs. F. Coles, first; Mrs. H. F. Woods, second; Mrs. Ferguson, third; seven entries.

Fifty-yard race, unmarried ladies, Miss Harriet Coles, first; Miss Alice Hiffe, second; Miss Eisenhardt, third; eight ran.

Sack race, men, T. S. Brown, first; W. J. Collins, second; H. H. Bartsch, third; eight ran.

Sack race, boys, Thomas Westwood, first; Jack Sisson, second; Thomas Hiffe, third; eleven ran.

Men's race, 240 yards, W. J. Collins, first; J. Comerford, second; William Hiffe, third; seven ran.

Fat men's race, John Lally, first; Daniel Hiffe, second; J. L. Smith, third; seven ran.

Broad jump, W. J. Collins, first, eighteen feet and two inches; H. Coles, second; William Hiffe, third; six entries.

Three-legged race, men, Collins and Reid, first; Palmer and Hiffe, second; Cole and Brown, third; eight entries.

Three-legged race, boys, T. Westwood and J. Sisson, first; W. Westwood and F. Hargreaves, second; five entries.

Half-mile race, John Reid, first; David H. Burns, second; H. Coles, third; six ran.

Fifty-yard race, boys under 8, Archibald Terry, first; Prescott Whyte, second; Malcolm Craig, third; eleven ran.

Consolation race, girls under 12, Margaret Hiffe, first; Theresa Lally, second, fourteen ran.

Consolation race, boys under 12, Fred Holbrow, first; James Riggs, second; eleven ran.

Tug of war, Commercials vs. Private Gardeners, won by the Private Gardeners, captained by D. Finlayson. The team was as follows: William Robb, J. L. Smith, J. Comerford, P. McKenzie, W. McGillivray, J. G. Duguid, David Burns, Peter Scott, G. H. Cray, Fred Coles and A. G. Sawyer.

Silver spoons offered by J. C. Vaughan for best looking babies awarded to Dorothy Louise Coles, Leo Boyle, Marjorie Sim.

Picnic Pickings.

Mrs. Peter Fisher, Mrs. Kenneth Finlayson and M. A. Patten officiated as the judges of babies. We heard no criticism of their awards, for they wisely gave prizes to all entrants.

Solari, the left-handed pitcher for the Commercials, completely nonplused R. W. Curtis' strong team. Sim proved an able catcher, while Ruane distinguished himself at right field.

The best race of the day was that for fat men. All the competitors set a killing pace, and with a few yards more to go, Dan Iliffe, who was increasing his speed all the time, would have won. Had T. Pegler competed, the result might have been different.

E. A. Pierce was busy rounding up delegates for the Rochester convention and captured quite a few, as well as a number of new S. A. F. members.

Robert Cameron, W. J. Stewart, Elijah A. Wood and Rev. W. T. Hutchins were among the trade scribblers noted. We did not observe any of them competing in the track events.

Ex-President Downs, just convalescing from sickness, was missed, also Ex-President Pettigrew. The ex-presidents seen included T. J. Grey, George M. Anderson, W. J. Stewart, James Wheeler, M. H. Norton and T. H. Westwood.

Peter M. Miller worked like a Trojan for the success of the picnic. The executive committee also did nobly, Thomas Pegler being in evidence everywhere.

James Wheeler for the first time was below the limit for the fat men's race. James has shrunk considerably of late; commercialism is responsible for it.

The Iliffe family, as usual, were to the front in nearly all events and captured a lot of prizes. Daniel himself is still a sprinter of no mean caliber.

The Commercials missed W. A. Manda and other heavyweights on this occasion. They lacked weight, but gave their opponents a good pull for their money.

J. Comerford did not compete in the broad jump. He cleared twenty feet and ten inches at an athletic meet July 23 and could evidently make a strong bid for six feet in the high jump had he been pushed.

Various Notes.

S. J. Goddard returned from Europe July 28 after an enjoyable visit. He had a rather rough passage home, however.

John J. Fee, of Jamaica Plain, is handling fine lots of outdoor grown Lilium longiflorum and Gladiolus America at C Park street. Mr. Fee is one of our leading bulb specialists and is just unpacking his first importations.

Charles Evans, of Watertown, is bringing in extra fine double gypsophila, which sells on sight. For florists there is no more desirable variety to grow than the single one.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Ward, of Montvale, left for Provincetown, Mass., August 2, for a vacation. Mr. Ward has his new house, 32x110, nearly completed. It will be used for carnations and sweet peas.

C. E. Robinson, of H. M. Robinson & Co., is home from his vacation. His last week was spent in New York. He will now attend strictly to business.

Thomas J. Grey has just returned from a successful business trip in the western part of the state. He expects to take in the Rochester convention, while Peter M. Miller, of the same firm, is planning a trip to Bar Harbor, Me.

An autumn show of flowers, fruits and vegetables will be held at Horticultural hall, September 23 to 25.

Eber Holmes, of the Montrose Greenhouses, is busy painting, piping and doing work preparatory for winter. He is shipping in fine lots of Killarney, White Killarney and Kaiserin to C Park street, also small lots of Richmond.

Thomas Pegler, in addition to his other accomplishments, has added that of musician, and played both sacred and ragtime selections on the harp July 30 at C Park street, in such a way as to win the enthusiastic plaudits of the salesmen and buyers there.

July gave us barely one inch of precipitation, against an average of 3.60 for the last thirty-nine years. We have had several moderate showers, but would much welcome a soaking rain.

T. F. Galvin has one of his large show windows on Tremont street attractively arranged with aquatics. Another window looks invitingly green with Cocos Weddelliana, Asparagus plumosus, Phoenix Roebelenii and other foliage plants.

An elaborate water garden is being constructed on the Larz Anderson estate, Brookline, where Duncan Finlayson has charge.

The Boston delegation for the Rochester convention is steadily growing and present indications are that the special Pullman car will have a full complement of passengers. It has not yet been decided whether the party will leave in the morning or evening. Probably it will be on the morning of August 15, arriving in Rochester about 10 o'clock in the evening. The round trip tickets are $13.40. Intending delegates should notify E. A. Pierce, Waltham, at once, and also secure rooms at the Seneca hotel in advance.

Samuel Eintracht, of Wertheimer Bros., New York, reports business good.

James Wheeler's new carnation house holds about 22,000 plants and the major portion of these are now in their places. W. N. Craig.

THE ST. LOUIS GROUPS.

The event of the year in Florists' Club circles at St. Louis is the annual outing. There always is a large attendance and everybody has a fine time. This year the outing was held at Ramona park, July 21 The accompanying illustrations are from photographs by Oscar Kuehn.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The quality of outdoor grown flowers is far below the standard of other years because of the long drought. A few special Beauties touch 20 cents. From that top they fall rapidly to 50 cents per hundred for the short stems. No other long-stemmed roses are arriving; 4 cents will buy the selected of any variety. Richmond is short, open and unsalable. The average will not go above $1.50 and some say even $1 per hundred would be a fairer estimate.

No carnations are worth over $1 per hundred. Most of the stock arriving is about as near worthless as you can imagine. Good asters grown indoors go rapidly and at excellent prices. Most of the outdoor stock is small and imperfect. It could not be otherwise, and already there is too much of it. Where will the price go when the Rochester shipments appear?

The hydrangeas coming from the south are good. The local stock shows the need of a drink. Of gladioli, even from the no-rain sections, there is no limit. Nearly everyone has a surplus of the red varieties and thousands of these were sold as low as 25 cents per hundred. The market is glutted with them. They cannot be digested and they go into the discard. There is no place here for anything that is not first-class, and the sooner this is realized by the grower the better for all concerned. The market here for perfect quality has no limit. Of cattleyas a few gigas and Gaskelliana arrive daily, and sprays of several other orchids, and the price holds steady, though the demand continues light.

The lily shipments continue large, but the market seems to absorb them to the tune of a quarter million weekly. Prices are falling. One veteran wholesaler says it will be October before the uplift is felt and predicts a dull September. Society, however, declares differently and is already announcing a record listing of September weddings.

S. C. Hopkins, bookkeeper for A. J. Guttman, is back from a two weeks' cruise among the Maine seaside resorts. Mr. Reidel goes to Canada for his vacation after the convention.

Mrs. August Millang and family are at Jeffersonville. W. H. Miller, brother of A. L. Miller, president of the Florists' Club, now with A. Millang, is having a vacation at Belmar and Asbury Park, N. J.

A. J. Guttman says he will be at the convention with samples, as manager and president of the Best Oil Co., with paint mills at Ellenville, N. Y. The new offices of the company are in the Hudson Terminal building. Mrs. Guttman and her two sons have been in Europe since June and are now touring Switzerland.

H. Kenney, of Brooklyn, is doing a remarkable business and ships his goods to every state in the Union. It looks as if the big factory would need to be enlarged.

The sincere sympathy of the trade is extended Mrs. C. W. Scott in her bereavement, her mother, Mrs. Andrew Mills, having passed away last week. The floral tokens of respect from her friends were many and beautiful. Mr. Scott is now at the helm of the Yokohama Nursery Co.

The seed houses are all busy with consignments of French bulbs and Bermuda lilies and the shipping season has begun.

Bowling.

The Long Island Bowling Club devoted Tuesday afternoon, July 26, as usual, to preparation for first honors at Rochester. The scores tell the reason why:

Player	1st	2d	3d	4th	5th
Donaldson	199	176	161	168	203
Einsman	163	141	135	154	136
Eichman	178	159	156	161	176
Siebrecht, W., Sr.	150	146	148	141	123
Kessler	164	176	140	102	153
Siebrecht, H.	122	181	155	138	161

Miesem will be home from Europe this week and there is no doubt the team will make a great record.

The New York boys are also ambitious and improving. The following scores were made July 27:

Player	1st	2d	3d
Miller	...	158	171
Smith	115	156	135
Berry	154	169	138
Wittbeck	175	212	195
McCollom	181	230	166
Fenrich	152	146	143
Manda	161	149	161

President Miller surprised the members with his skill. There is no doubt if New York does itself justice at the convention a bowling club will be formed, backed by the president and the best element of the club, something that should have been consummated long ago. J. Austin Shaw.

OBITUARY.

Anna L. Westman.

Miss Anna L. Westman, widely known Cleveland retail florist and member of the firm of Westman & Getz, died August 1, after only a few hours' illness. Strong to the last in her Christian Science belief that there was no such thing as disease of the body, Miss Westman refused to have a physician summoned and the case was reported to the coroner, who made an investigation and said that heart failure was undoubtedly the cause of death.

Miss Westman was 45 years of age. For the past seven years she had been in the florists' business with Miss Hester A. Getz, at 5923 Euclid avenue. The firm was Westman & Getz and was well known in the east end of Cleveland. She had lived in Cleveland for a number of years, although her birthplace was Sweden. The firm was probably the best known in the trade of any in the country in which both partners were women. They did a large volume of sales.

Henry J. Bowden.

Henry James Bowden, of Rochester, N. Y., died July 23. He leaves a widow. Mr. Bowden was born in Bedford, England, in 1848, his father, James Bowden, being an instructor in Modern School, where his brother now teaches, and came to this country to visit friends in 1871. After a short stay here he decided to remain, and entered into the nursery business with Chase Bros. Co., with whom he remained ten years before deciding to start a business of his own. He secured as a partner D. H. Patty, of Geneva, and the two men conducted a nursery business up to the present time. His business associates knew him as a man whose fair dealing was not to be questioned and a person whose judgment was always to be relied upon. His success in business can be traced to his unswerving honesty and industry. Mr. Bowden was an expert accountant, but his chief interest lay in his nursery business, with which he kept in touch up to the time of his death.

Mrs. Otto Kuehnel.

Mrs. Kuehnel, wife of Otto Kuehnel, a nurseryman and florist at 122 McCracken avenue, Muskegon, Mich., died July 26. She had been ill only a few hours. A short funeral service was held at the residence July 29 and the body was taken to Chicago for burial. She was 51 years old, and had lived in Muskegon about a year and a half. The members of the trade extend their deepest sympathy to Mr. Kuehnel.

George H. Sheppard.

George H. Sheppard, a nurseryman of Lamonte, Mo., died of Bright's disease July 20, at the age of 78 years. He was a native of Indiana. He removed to Lamonte in 1868 and engaged in the nursery business. For many years he made fruit exhibits at St. Louis fairs, winning large numbers of premiums, and in later years he made exhibits at the Missouri State Fair, at Sedalia. He was unmarried.

H. Reynolds.

H. Reynolds, one of the pioneer residents of Monroe, Mich., and probably the oldest nurseryman in the state, died recently at the age of 91 years. He was a native of New York and removed to Michigan in 1840.

Alexander Youngston.

Alexander Youngston, for the last few years a florist on Pearl street, in Barre, Vt., died July 25 at his home on Upland avenue. His death was due to pulmonary edema, following a light attack of pneumonia. He was born in Elgin, Scotland, May 5, 1855, and was married in 1885 to Susie Kirton, of his native town. He came to this country a short time afterward, living in different New England cities, and finally removed to Barre about eight years ago, where he had made his home ever since, with the exception of a visit to his old home abroad. He is survived by his widow and four children, Susie, Mary, Alexander and Orville.

Joseph Zellers.

Joseph Zellers, Newark, N. J., died July 26. He was for twelve years a berry grower and lately had grown pansy plants and other florists' stock.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

CONVENTION NOTES.

The chairmen of all the local committees at Rochester met in the club rooms on Tuesday evening, July 26. The work of the committees was reported in detail and the officers of the Rochester association freely commended the work done by the committees.

C. B. Ogsten, chairman of the ladies' entertainment committee, reported that arrangements had been made for a touring car trip on Wednesday afternoon, August 17, starting at 2 o'clock. The trip will include rides through Rochester's most beautiful residence sections, Seneca park, Maplewood park, the university campus, Genesee valley and Highland parks, ending with a run to Cobb's Hill reservoir, where a panoramic view of the entire city can be had.

The committee on the shooting contests reported through the chairman, R. G. Salter. These contests will be held on Thursday afternoon, August 18, at 3 o'clock, on the grounds of the Riverside Gun Club, near Genesee Valley park. A prize of $20 in gold is offered for the greatest number of birds in any event. Other prizes include cash, diamond stickpins, gun case, fishing rods, etc.

Chairman A. H. Vick, of the bowlers' committee, reported that, after much effort, he had succeeded in obtaining the Brunswick-Balke-Collender gold medal. This will be one of the most valued prizes offered, as the winning of the gold medal indicates special skill on the part of the winner. Mr. Vick announced that the Grand Central Alleys, where the contests will be held, had offered a silver cup, and that George Eastman had offered a No. 3 Brownie camera. Silver cups have also been offered by Vaughan's Seed Store, of New York and Chicago, and Henry A. Dreer, of Philadelphia. Other prizes are: Gem safety razor, from Weaver Hardware Co.; gentleman's silk umbrella, from Sibley, Lindsay & Curr Co.; scarfpin and buttons, from J. R. White Co.; stickpin and buttons, from Wm. Kennedy; art pottery vase, from H. B. Graves; ladies' gold pin, from S. D. Burritt; picture, from Scranton, Wetmore & Co.; a case of O. F. C., from New York and Kentucky Co.; a case of Sherwood from Fee Bros. The bowling contests will be held on Thursday, August 18.

Friday, August 19, is to be the great day of the week. The outing committee has made arrangements to entertain the visitors at Manitou Beach, one of the most beautiful lake resorts near Rochester. A part of the forenoon is to be devoted to inspecting the exhibits at Convention hall, and about 11 o'clock special cars will convey the society to Ontario Beach, thence over one of the most picturesque trolley routes to Manitou. This line runs along the bluffs overlooking Lake Ontario, past summer homes, pleasure resorts and campers' tents—altogether a trip of delight from first to last. Lunch will be served at the Manitou Beach hotel, and at 4 o'clock J. M. Keller will announce that his baseball team is prepared to meet all comers.

Among the social events of convention week, the president's reception on Tuesday evening and the ladies' reception on Wednesday evening are the most important. Both will be held at the Hotel Seneca.

Charles H. Vick says that the trade exhibit will surpass his fondest dreams. Almost every inch of space is taken. But Convention hall is a big place, and even at the last minute Mr. Vick will make a place for the late comers who have something to show. Mr. Vick also reports that the Souvenir Album is well on toward completion, and that it is a triumph of the printer's art. It will be a prized souvenir of the Rochester S. A. F. convention. E. F. R.

HOTELS AT ROCHESTER.

The hotels at Rochester are preparing to accommodate all who may attend the S. A. F. convention, but the wise visitor will engage his room at an early date. Although Rochester is well supplied with first-class hotels, it is not at all improbable that they will be crowded during convention week. Even now various clubs have booked advance orders for their members. The following are the leading hotels and their rates; all of them are near Convention hall:

Hotel Rochester, Main street west. European plan. Rates, $1.50 to $2.50 without bath, $2.50 to $3.50 with bath.

Powers Hotel, Main street west. European plan. Rates, $1.50 to $4.

Hotel Seneca, Clinton avenue south. European plan. Rates, $1.50 to $3.50, single; $3 to $5, two persons.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

The Convention.

The twenty-sixth annual convention promises to be the best meeting ever held by the Society of American Florists. Preparations for the meeting and exhibition are rapidly nearing completion. C. H. Vick, superintendent of the exhibition, reports that most of the exhibition space has been taken and that the large hall, with over an acre of floor space, will be filled. The modification of the rules applying to the signs will do much to make the exhibition beautiful, as well as instructive and profitable. The public will be admitted each evening, and on Thursday afternoon. An admission fee will be charged.

The sports committee reports that arrangements for the bowling and shooting tournaments on Thursday afternoon are also nearing completion. In this connection attention should be called to the rule that only members in good standing will be allowed to participate.

Friday is in the hands of the Rochester Florists' Club, and a general good time is promised. To those who have been at Rochester before, nothing need be said about the royal welcome awaiting them. All others should come and see for themselves. Bring your certificates and pins and they will be the open sesame for everything at the convention.

Department of Registration.

As no objections have been filed, public notice is hereby given that the registration of the roses, Dark Pink Killarney and Lady Cromwell, by A. N. Pierson, Inc., of Cromwell, Conn., and the rose, Purity, by Hoopes, Bro. & Thomas Co., of West Chester, Pa., become complete.

THOSE S. A. F. AMENDMENTS.

Mr. Rudd Offers Explanation.

Notice has been sent to the members of the S. A. F. of a number of amendments to be brought up for consideration at the coming convention. The most important of these are the series intended to make the members of the board of directors elective and to make the offices of the secretary and treasurer appointive by the board of directors.

The present conditions are that the board of directors consists of eleven members, namely, the president, first vice-president, secretary and treasurer, who are of course elected each year, and the junior ex-president, who was elected the year before. These five members can be said to be elected by the direct vote of the members of the society. The other six, which is a majority of the board, are appointed. They are the personal appointees of the president, each president having the privilege of appointing two, so that the society is in the somewhat anomalous position of having a majority of its board of directors not elected by itself, but the personal appointments of various presidents. The amendments, if carried, will reduce the board of directors from eleven to nine and make them all strictly elective.

Theoretically, at least, this seems more in accord with the general customs of this country and is the practice in nearly all corporations existing in this country. Practically all ordinary corporations are compelled to elect their board of directors by the law under which they exist.

It will be noted that the amendments also take away the voting power in the board of directors from the secretary and the treasurer. If these officers are to be appointed by the board of directors, it would certainly be an exceedingly bad proposition to give them a vote in the deliberations of the body which appoints them and which can remove them. It seems to the writer that so long as the present close scrutiny of the handling of the funds is carried out, and the heavy bonds are required from the treasurer, it really makes little difference whether he is elected or is appointed.

The office of secretary, however, it would seem, could be most wisely taken out of politics. The secretary is the chief clerk of the society; he is the only

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Incorporated by Act of Congress, March 4, '01

Officers for 1910: President, F. R. Pierson, Tarrytown, N. Y.; vice-president, F. W. Vick, Rochester, N. Y.; secretary, H. B. Dorner, Urbana, Ill.; treasurer, W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, N. Y.

Annual convention, Rochester, N. Y., August 16 to 19, 1910.

RESULTS.
We give them. You get them.
We both have them.

Don't let surpluses of field-grown carnation plants go to waste. Even if you have only a few hundreds it will pay to offer them in The Review's Classified Department. Someone wants just what you have to spare.

Retail florists who have tried automobiles for delivery purposes find it is necessary to keep them busy if expense is to be kept within reasonable limits. If they stand idle they "eat their heads off" much faster than does a horse.

Otto G. Koenig, secretary of the St. Louis Horticultural Society, advises that at a recent meeting of the executive committee a resolution was adopted "against the advisability of inviting the S. A. F. to St. Louis for 1911."

New Orleans wants the S. A. F. convention in 1915, when the city expects to have the Panama exposition. Harry Papworth says: "You all may think you will find a hot south in August [he isn't considering the possibility of a change of date.—Ed], but instead you will find one of the coolest and healthiest of cities in the states, fanned by the breezes of Lake Ponchartrain and the Mississippi river."

WANT US TO KNOW.

One of the pleasant features of publishing The Review is that so many subscribers and so many advertisers write to tell of their satisfaction with the paper and its work—they are not content simply to accept the service and pay the bill, but are impelled to put in words their appreciation:

We would like to let you know that the ad in your paper has been doing fine work for us.—Marinus De Witte, Kalamazoo, Mich., July 29, 1910.

Results from advertising to date are very satisfactory.—Wm. Toole & Sons, Baraboo, Wis., July 30, 1910.

Your ad got us busy on Killarney; had to send back over $100.—Frey & Frey, Lincoln, Neb., July 30, 1910.

The Review's Convention Number comes out August 18, with a full report of the S. A. F. meeting at Rochester. It will be a specially good issue for advertisers.

CENSUS OF FLORICULTURE.

The census of floriculture will be taken by the special enumerators who have handled the other industries—it can't be taken by mail.

In taking the census of floriculture, and of the nursery trade, the census officials prepared blanks, approved by a committee of the S. A. F., which were mailed to all the names purchasable—but the list was by no means complete, many failed to respond, and others did not supply information sufficiently complete.

The census bureau has had a large organization in the field collecting special information on the industries of the country and on this force, not yet through with its work, dependence is placed in the matter of floriculture. In each district the special enumerator will check up the lists of florists and nurserymen, visit those who have not returned the blanks properly or completely filled and make the census of these trades on the same basis as others. The work already has been begun. It will be a long time before it will be completed.

AMERICAN GLADIOLUS SOCIETY.

As an addition to the prizes already announced, to be awarded at the Rochester show, Kelway & Son, Langport, Somerset, England, have offered the Kelway medal, for the best collection of named varieties of Kelway's Large-flowering Gladioli, their current Manual of Horticulture to be taken as a guide to the names eligible, and these to include only the Large-flowering Gladioli, Kelway's strain. Entries for this prize should be made under No. 16, Open Class.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The demand is extremely erratic. Now and then there comes a day when the telegraph messengers flock to the whole district and everybody is on the jump to supply the out-of-town demand; and it usually happens that on such days there also is a fair run of local trade. But following an extremely active day there will come two or three days of deadly dullness. Last week, with its extreme heat, there was nothing whatever doing in the middle of the week. Saturday brought a fine run of business, cleaning up everything that was in any way usable, and Monday of the present week also was marked by great activity; the call for stock exceeded the supply of good quality.

There really are few good flowers now in the market, and many buyers have to content themselves with material which they would not otherwise consider usable. The supply of Beauties has fallen off materially; there are few good ones to be had and for the best of the long grade $4 per dozen is asked, with a corresponding advance in prices of other lengths. Of roses there is a fair supply. One commission house reports having handled 75,000 last week, largely Killarney and White Killarney, with lesser quantities of Kaiserin, My Maryland and Richmond. Local buyers like Maryland, but there is extremely light call for Richmond. Maid and Bride are not often seen. There are more of the Killarneys than of all other roses put together. When one has in mind the superb stock of late spring, the present supply appears extremely poor in quality, but such as it is there is enough to go around, and the quality probably is as good as it ever was at the opening of August.

Carnations are practically out of the market. There continue to be light receipts, but most of the flowers are so small that they have little value. Anything that can be classed as good is worth real money. The asters are aggravating wholesalers and retailers; they seem to be more backward in coming forward than ever before. There are plenty of the open-centered small white asters that sell for a cent this

PINK—WHITE
Killarney

A Large crop of fine quality now on.

Our Pink Killarneys are known far and wide as the finest roses that come into the Chicago market. The White Killarneys are from the same growers, and have the same quality. We never had nicer, cleaner summer Killarneys than this year. Try them and see for yourself. Send an order today.

ASTERS! ASTERS!!

Asters have been a bit slow in coming in, because of the dry weather, and the first were not as good as they might have been—but we are now receiving a good grade of stock and shall have large supplies of fancy Asters in all colors by the latter part of the present week. Order of us at all times.

Beauties

Our Beauties give the best of satisfaction and our supply is such that we can take care of all orders. Better get in touch with us if you want an all-the-year-around supply of fine Beauties.

season, but which would be totally unsalable with anything like a normal supply of first-class flowers. The demand much exceeds the supply of good asters and it is in this department the wholesalers have their greatest trouble. Some superb indoor flowers are selling for 60 cents to 75 cents a dozen.

Gladioli in the three self colors are selling well. Mrs. Francis King runs America a close race as to popularity. Augusta, white, sells well, if cheaper, for funeral work. Other varieties meet with indifferent demand, but somehow seem to fetch fair prices on the active days. Auratum and speciosum lilies are much more abundant. They do not sell briskly. The call for Easter lilies is erratic. Valley has become one of the scarce items. Sweet peas have disappeared. Cattleyas are in light supply and an occasional order is hard to fill. The last peonies were sold at the close of July.

The green goods market is quiet.

The July Business.

Summing up the July trade, most of the wholesale houses find it made a new record. At the opening of the month there was a period which fell behind the same days of last year; the first half of July always is the dullest of the year in this market. Subsequently there came several days of first-class business. Later the demand became spasmodic, some days extremely heavy and other days rather light. Taking it all together, even with the lighter receipts of asters, the month's sales foot up better than a year ago. Summer business has been increasing steadily for several years.

July Weather.

July was the warmest the weather office has recorded since 1901. The average daily temperature was 3.6 degrees higher than the normal temperature for the month, with a pronounced period of great heat from July 20 to 29. Less than one-half the normal amount of rain fell; it was only 1.79, but, curiously enough, even this light precipitation was greater than in July of either of the last two years. In addition to the extreme heat, the month was unusually bright, there being an average of 11.6 hours of sunshine each day in the month. This is seventy-eight per cent of the sunshine possible in the month.

Notice

Our business is increasing so steadily, and so rapidly, that we are constantly in position to handle to advantage additional consignments of first-class stock.

Growers who are not now in every way satisfied with their connections are invited to see us now—before the opening of the new season.

The Convention Train.

The Florists' Club's transportation committee announces that it has arranged for a special train to Rochester, leaving Chicago, via the Lake Shore, Monday, August 15, at 5:30 p. m. The fare, on the certificate plan, will be $21.48 for the round trip, with $3 extra each way for sleeper. Each member of the club has been sent a postal card on which to make reservation.

The Oldest Box.

A landmark is passing. The oldest ice-box in the market is giving way to one of the largest. It was sixteen years ago, while located at 88 Wabash avenue, that Kennicott Bros. Co. built this box, one section of which is now being discarded. There has been wonderful change during the lifetime of the old box. In its day it was a marvel for size, but now its doors are too low; the long-stemmed flowers of today require more head-room than was dreamed of sixteen years ago. The space where the old box stood is being used for counters; the new box is to go in and fill a room formerly used for greens and will be one of the largest in the market.

night, August 4. It is the purpose to pass a resolution inviting the S. A. F. to hold its 1911 meeting in Chicago.

At an adjourned meeting of the Horticultural Society, August 2, C. L. Hutchinson was elected president in place of the late W. E. Kelley. The fall show is in the hands of the executive committee and certain amendments to the by-laws were adopted to give the committee more of a free hand in the management of the society's affairs.

Edwardsville, Ill.—State Vice-President J. F. Ammann has sent a letter to all florists in southern Illinois inviting them to join the party leaving St. Louis for Rochester by special sleeper at 1 p. m., August 15. He adds: "If you are not a member of the S. A. F. send $3 and you will feel better."

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business is quite dull, except funeral work. Among the retailers the afternoons are generally taken up by renovating and getting things in shape for the opening of the fall season next month, which is being looked for by all of us. The wholesalers are about in the same fix after the morning sales are over. The stock that comes in is hard to handle, as the bulk of it is inferior. Really good flowers were scarce all last week. Now that asters and tuberoses are beginning to come in, a better assortment is to be had.

Roses and carnations are of poor quality, and scarce at that. Gladioli have slacked up and good quality has become scarce, with the price up to $3 and $4 per hundred for the choice spikes. Smilax, asparagus and other greens sell well.

Various Notes.

Otto Bruening, of H. G. Berning's, has returned from his vacation trip. The much needed rest puts him in shape for the opening of the season.

Frank A. Weber has invited the Florists' Club to hold the installation meeting on the grounds of the H. J. Weber & Sons Nursery in Nursery, St. Louis

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

Ostrich plume, when free from blemished center, are the finest asters coming into town. They are welcome; the bulk of the earlier variety is poor, much of it selling below even the low quotations on the current price list. Purple and rose-pink are the scarce colors in asters, white, soft pink and lavender being extremely plentiful. The trading in asters is heavy. Easter lilies are coming forward prominently, prices having dropped to a degree that makes them extremely popular with the ordinary buyer; select flowers bring good prices, but quantity orders are filled at extremely moderate figures.

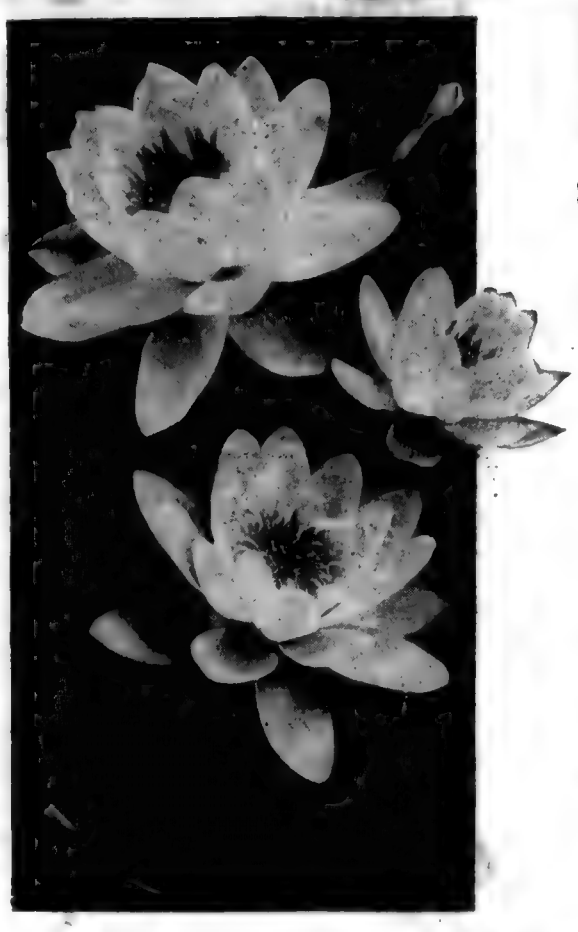
Kaiserin roses are a little more plentiful, though the quality of all the roses that can be used for white often leaves much to be desired. There has been quite a fair demand for My Maryland to be used in shipping orders, and Beauties would sell better were they received tight, much of the stock coming in too open. Valley has been in excess of the demand, some really fine stock being difficult to market. Gladioli are dull, at lower prices. Hydrangea paniculata has made its appearance; it is occasionally used for design work. The first tuberoses are also here. Exceedingly dry weather hurts the appearance of outdoor flowers.

Mr. Bayersdorfer Abroad.

H. Bayersdorfer chatted entertainingly one afternoon this week of his trip abroad. Mr. Bayersdorfer spent over three months away, visiting Germany, Austria-Hungary, Italy, Belgium, Holland, France, Norway and Sweden. The variety and quality of the material adaptable for florists' use is greater, Mr. Bayersdorfer said, than ever before. He was particularly enthusiastic over the baskets, which, in form and design, were the prettiest he had ever seen. Speaking of the flowers of Europe, Mr. Bayersdorfer said he had been particularly interested in the usefulness of the pansy. Pansies were stemmed individually, made to stand erect as our florists would make a rose or a carnation, and in that way handsome bunches were arranged entirely of pansies, sometimes all in one color. Pansies were also used in combination with orchids and lilies of the valley.

Mr. Bayersdorfer visited the flower show at Haarlem, where he admired the tulips planted in beds of solid color. Large, beautifully shaded flowers borne on long, heavy stems were there in profusion, the entire absence of mixture heightening the richness of the effect. The floral exposition at Brussels was also visited and enjoyed. Mr. Bayersdorfer spoke of the pretty German custom of presenting friends who are leaving with handsome bunches of flowers. Outdoor roses were especially favored.

Club Meeting.



The August meeting of the Florists' Club was held in Horticultural hall, Tuesday evening, August 2. Robert Kift read an interesting paper on "The Mission of the Trade Paper." Mr. Kift is the leading exponent of the horticultural press in this city and his ideas were received with favor and hearty applause.

John Westcott reported for the transportation committee that the club would leave for Rochester Monday, August 15, at 10:30 a. m. from the Reading terminal. The fare will be $8.55 each way, $7 each way where ten or more travel together.

The bowling team will consist of Batchelor, Connor, Dodds, Graham and Robertson, with Adelberger as substitute.

The Advent of Mr. Curran.

Philadelphia rose growers will be interested to more than an ordinary degree in the arrival of James A. Curran, whose reputation as a rose grower is national. Mr. Curran first came into prominence in this country as a shipper to the Chicago market and his flowers have since attracted attention in other centers.

On Monday, August 1, Mr. Curran commenced work as manager of the immense range of glass owned and operated by the Florex Gardens, at North Wales, Pa. The undertaking will be one of more than ordinary difficulty, as those familiar with the size of the plant will readily admit. It is comparatively easy to produce results from a range of moderate size, but it takes ability to produce the same results from so vast a range as that at North Wales. Florists generally will agree that Mr. Fuerstenberg has secured an able grower and wish him success in the splendid field offered for his energies.

Various Notes.

Frank Johnson, of the A. L. Randall Co., Chicago, favored the Rising Eastern Market with a visit a few days ago.

Samuel F. Lilley is gradually getting settled in his new quarters at 5 Mole street, where he has increased space and improved light. Mole street lies between Market and Ranstead, also Fifteenth and Sixteenth streets.

Miss Getz, of Westman & Getz, Cleveland, has been in the city.

M. Rice & Co. are importing quantities of choice prepared fern in anticipation of further revival in this branch of supplies.

A Saturday afternoon boom in the real estate market at West Philadelphia had a beneficial effect on Robert Craig, who is, I am happy to say, better.

A. Littman, of Atlantic City, has a store full of many colored waving plumes and foliage that give his place a thoroughly seashorely appearance.

Israel Rosnosky has returned from the Carolinas.

F. J. Michell and F. J. Michell, Jr., have been spending a few days at Atlantic City.

David Rust has sprained his ankle playing cricket.

The sheriff sold the Mergenthaler greenhouses August 1. They were bid in by the holder of the second mortgage.

Joseph G. Neidinger has added an entire story, the third, to his building. This will be used as a warehouse, giving opportunity for much needed development, the business having outgrown its present quarters.

The Keller Pottery Co. reports an excellent season, better than the previous year. A new 8-inch press followed the new automobile delivery truck, a marked improvement. This truck, by the way, carries more than two two-horse wagon loads of pots and pleases the customers by its speed in "getting there."

WASHINGTON.

The Washington Florists' Club made a big day out of the fourth annual outing to Great Falls, Va., July 26, when about 300 members and their friends made merry. Shaffer, Elmer Mayberry, W. W. Kimmel, Otto Bauer and A. C. Oehmler.

In addition to the Washington florists, a delegation of prominent Baltimore florists and their wives were present, among them being Charles C. Seibold, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Boone, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Barry, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Perry, and Mr. Lipsett.

LENOX, MASS.

The Midsummer Show.

The annual show of perennials and hardy annuals of the Lenox Horticultural Society was held in the town hall July 28 and was a great success. Although the entries fell rather short of last year, the high standard of all exhibits was fully maintained. The exhibition was a fortnight earlier than last year, for the benefit of the coming queen of summer flowers, sweet peas, and these dreams of color and refinement more than held their own. The display had the appearance of a national sweet pea show on a smaller scale, but smaller only in numbers, not in up-to-date varieties or in quality of blooms.

The winner of the big class came from the High Lawn House gardens, G. Foulsham, gardener. This exhibit stood out by itself, for length of stems, purity of color, substance of flowers, and in fact all the points. The varieties were Florence Morse Spencer, Miss Wilmott, F. Dolby, John Ingham, Tennant Spencer, Othello, E. J. Castle, Helen Lewis, Helen Pierce, Queen Alexandra, Countess Spencer and Lord Nelson.

Another display, not for competition, which was one of the features of the show, was a collection of thirty-four varieties of sweet peas from Mrs. J. Sloane, A. J. Loveless, gardener. They were arranged with much taste, in low bowls, and showed their beauty to full advantage. Mr. Loveless was awarded a diploma of merit for this exhibit, and deserved it.

The hardy perennials staged by Mrs. J. E. Parsons, R. Spiears, gardener, and W. D. Sloane, F. Heeremans, gardener, would be hard to beat. The same may be said of the annuals. It was a hard tussle between J. E. Parsons and J. E. Alexander, E. W. Jack, gardener. They demonstrated in a practical way what beautiful subjects these are.

Another interesting class was hardy fruit. Mrs. J. E. Alexander and Charles Lanier, A. H. Wingett, gar-

The Pansy Problem

YOU'VE noted the various "ads" of Pansy Seed scattered here and there, through this and other Trade Journals. You've seen a lot of pretty illustrations. You've read dazzling descriptions and reasons galore for sowing certain strains. Then you finally observe that they are all about the same price and you hardly know which to place your confidence in.

So, to help you come to a Pansy conclusion, to guide you in securing a real good strain, here's an abstract from a letter written to us under date of July 19th, 1910, by Mr. John Coombs, Florist:

> Hartford, Conn.
> "Pansy seed I bought from you last year was best I ever had."

Of course this was our Giant Exhibition Mixture, on which we have more testimonials than on any particular strain of seed. Florists come to us year after year for this strain. You can see how we specialize on it, by taking up your copy of our advance Bulb Catalogue and noting how we advertise it on the front cover and again on page 14. It's one of the very best things in our line.

A Few Facts About Michell's Giant Exhibition Pansy Seed.

> Utica, N. Y.
> Kindly book our order for the same amount of Pansy seed we purchased from you last year, also the same mixture; we would like very much for you to see the Pansies, they are the finest we ever saw.
> A. & J. W.
> P. S.—The mixture referred to above was our Giant Exhibition Strain.

> Spring City, Pa.
> The Giant Exhibition Pansies, seed of which I purchased of you last Fall, are now in bloom. I wish you could see them. The flowers are of the largest size and finest colors. I have grown Pansies for the last twenty years and thought I had the best, but I must say yours take the cake; they must be seen to be appreciated. A. S. C.

dener, were the star performers this time, but the former came out on the top. His collection consisted of red, black and white currants, red and yellow raspberries, loganberry, blackberry, outdoor melons and gooseberries. Other exhibits of fruit were of equally high standard. Two exhibitors who did well in various classes were C. Carlquist and R. Bond.

Among the other exhibitors were: Miss H. Meyer, G. H. Morgan, T. Page, gardener; Mrs. M. K. Jessup, Miss Amy E. Hutton, G. De Heredia, E. Thompson, gardener; S. P. Shotter, A. Jenkins, gardener, and G. Foster, E. Jenkins, gardener.

John Lewis Childs, of Floral Park, N. Y., had a great display of gladioli, the best of them being Wild Rose, Contrast, America, Sulphur King, Mrs. R. A. Goldsmith, Attraction, Princess of India, Harlequin, Ruby and Melrose, but special note should be made of a vase of Dawn exhibited by F. Heeremans.

The judges were H. Allan, gardener to F. Vanderbilt, Hyde Park, N. Y., and J. R. Shields, Dalton, Mass. They performed their duties to the satisfaction of all. The thanks of the society are due to Mr. MacConnacchie for the courteous and business-like manner in which he managed the show.

Lenox shows hold a unique position. The only prizes offered are cards; but, mind you, it does not diminish the keenness of the competition a fraction. However, the society is looking forward to the time when it will have got beyond the pioneer stage of existence, when the work they are doing will be recognized in a substantial manner. And why not? One cannot help but admire this body of gardeners who have worked so unself-

Godetia Lady Albemarle is the name of this flower. There are several other excellent godetias, which are one of our most beautiful hardy annuals, preferring a partially shaded place to give the best results. Seed Trade News

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

FRENCH seed growers have had too much moisture.

THERE were good rains through Nebraska and the corn belt on the night of August 1.

DEALINGS in beans and peas in the city of New York now are required by ordinance to be on the basis of net weights.

IT hardly ever turns out that seed crops are as short as predicted and it is quite possible that the alarmists may have overstated the disaster in the pea district.

BETTER weather conditions during the last week have served to allay in a measure the fears for corn, vine and other seed crops.

REPORTS from the California Lima bean district are to the effect that weather conditions have been good during the latter part of July, giving the growing crops an excellent appearance at the end of the month.

SEED growing conditions in the Erfurt and Quedlinburg districts of Germany appear to be rather more favorable than they are in other large seed growing sections anywhere in the world this season, although California has had little to complain of.

SEITARO ARAI, of Yokohama, Japan, advises Ralph M. Ward & Co., New York, that the crop of longiflorum lily bulbs in the island of Oshima, which he visited in June, will be about a million less than expected, in salable bulbs, "the shortage, strange to say, being in the smaller sizes of 6 to 8 and 7 to 9."

IN response to a demand for greater knowledge of the cultural methods which are best adapted to seed growing, the United States Department of Agriculture has just issued a new publication, Bulletin 184 of the Bureau of Plant Industry, under the title, "The Production of Vegetable Seeds: Sweet Corn, Garden Peas and Beans." This discusses the whole subject thoroughly and gives instructions for securing crops of seeds for these different species. It is written for the farmer rather than the seedsman, but will interest anyone in any way connected with the business.

THE Farber Seed Co., of St. Joseph, Mo., has filed a statement increasing its capital stock from $5,000 to $10,000.

TOO MUCH RAIN IN OHIO.

Writing from Chillicothe, O., July 30, Schilder Bros. had this to say of the weather and the prospects for crops of onion sets and onion seed:

"In southern Ohio we have had too much rain for seed crops. We also understand that from July 1 to 17 it rained every day in the Louisville onion set district and there have been at least five rains since that time. Also in a certain onion seed growing section 100 miles west of us they have had a tremendous amount of rain, and it has hurt the crop. We know of one grower who plowed up eight acres this week. A month ago it looked as though there would be at least 3,000 pounds of seed on this piece of ground.

"We are harvesting our onion sets. Seventy-five per cent of the growers have extremely small sets, therefore less bushels than usual. Cold, wet weather early in the season, then a short dry spell, followed by continued rains, has been hard on the crop and numerous varieties of bugs have worked

THE SITUATION IN NEBRASKA.

The present is the critical time in the Nebraska seed-growing sections. The crops did not enter the critical period in any too favorable condition, but within the last few days there have been reports of good showers that have helped considerably. Writing at Waterloo, July 27, J. C. Robinson said:

"It is very dry in the seed-growing districts of Nebraska. We have not had a really good, soaking rain all spring. Crops are standing it remarkably well, but corn is just ready to tassel and set ears, and if we do not have rain soon the crop will be very short. Fairly good rains have recently occurred in the northern part of the state, but the central and southern parts are dry. Vine crops are standing up well, but would do better with some moisture. The next two weeks are the critical ones, and much depends on the weather during this time."

CRITICISM OF FRENCH BULBS.

Consular Agent Francis M. Mansfield, of Toulon, France, furnishes the following information in reply to complaints which have appeared in American horticultural journals that some inferior narcissus and hyacinth bulbs have been exported from the Toulon district:

No criticism is justified of the products of this part of France, obtained through responsible firms, or of those growers who bring scientific methods to bear in their culture. Whatever unsound stock may go out must be through the small and irresponsible farmers, and the reputable growers and shippers with whom I have talked on this matter say they positively refuse to sell damaged or unsound stock to these small factors, believing that if such should be put on the market and proved faulty, as it obviously would be, it would injure the great industry of Ollioules and Hyeres, which have a reputation for bulbs of the highest quality. Such damaged or unsound stock is burned or otherwise destroyed by the growers and shippers who have their best interests and that of the region at heart, the irresponsible middleman not even being thought of as a possible customer.

Unsound stock comes from three different causes: (1) From damaged stock, bruised or cut or rotted by damp; (2 and 3) from two well-known maladies, one resembling an interior rot of an enigmatic origin, and the other—seemingly attacking only the hyacinth—a tiny nematode which insinuates itself into the heart of the bulb through a hole which it makes at the base. These maladies are well known and recognized by experts, but to the non-expert it is conceivable that their presence might well be overlooked and possibly ignored by a careless shipper.

If this unsound stock were allowed to propagate in the United States, it might indeed be a serious matter, and the way to avoid it seems to be for buyers to deal only with known and responsible houses rather than to attempt to develop new sources of supply. The United States has the reputation of taking the best of the stock produced here and, incidentally, paying the highest prices, but buyers can only be assured

LILIUM HARRISII

Now Ready For Delivery

Our first consignments have just reached us, and our advance orders are all filled. In view of the fact that crop is shorter than last year, we advise those who have not already ordered to lose no time doing so. Last year we were not able to meet the demand for our selected Harrisii on late orders. At present we have a good supply, and will be able to take care of early orders; but there should be no delay in ordering, as there is sure to be a scarcity of good stock, especially in the large sizes. We offer selected stock of the original true Harrisii for early forcing, grown from the original true stock—splendid stock for early forcing, for which purpose Harrisii is so valuable. Our stock is not picked up indiscriminately from different sources, but is grown from one stock, and will be found very superior to the ordinary Harrisii usually offered, both in regard to freedom from disease and purity, and not the late type now so often furnished.

of this by drawing their supplies from houses of good repute.

The market price (between grower and exporter) of the competitive Roman White hyacinth bulb has just been fixed for the present season by the Growers' Syndicate at 68 francs ($13.12) per thousand of 1,050, the assortment to include the usual marketable sizes, from 4.7 to 5.9 inches. For extra sizes the members of the syndicate are at liberty to make their own prices.

THE SEASON AT ROCKY FORD.

The season at Rocky Ford, Colo., is early this year and melons now are ready for market in fair quantity. It will be remembered that the U. S. food and drugs bureau has ruled that Rocky Ford melons, to be sold under that name in interstate commerce, must actually be grown at Rocky Ford. H. D. Garwood, secretary of the Ebbert Seed Co., wrote July 28:

"We shipped to Colorado Springs yesterday the first Rocky Ford cantaloupes of the season; will make our second shipment today to Denver. These shipments break all former records for early shipments. The earliest shipment in the last five years was August 1, 1906. Indications are that the output for the season will be considerably lighter than usual, but quality never was better. General express shipments will begin August 6 to 8, car lot shipments about August 12."

BERMUDA ONION SEED.

Under date of July 11, Federico C. Varela sent from Teneriffe, in the Canary Islands, the following report of the year's crop of Bermuda onion seed:

"We have been considerably handicapped this year by most exceptionally rainless autumn and winter seasons. The persisting drought has checked from the outset the normal development of the plants, even where spring water is available, the flow being reduced to half of the usual. In numerous districts where water is collected in reservoirs during the rainy season the onion seed crop is a total failure through want of this precious liquid. With the absence are procured under strict supervision with regard to quality. They cost more than other brands and they sell for more money, but not for more than they are worth. A cheaper cow is simply less valuable—she will produce less milk; but a cheap bulb often produces an ugly flower and an ugly flower has no value at all.

A good grower can't afford to buy cheap bulbs, much less an amateur, so buy good bulbs, no matter whom you buy of. Horseshoe Brand Bulbs are good bulbs, having the best average of any brand known. Write for prices.

of rain and the adverse atmospheric conditions prevailing throughout the season, disease has made an appearance in the onion fields. There are few large or small onion seed plantations free from it. I have detected three different diseases—one caused by the larvæ of a fly setting on the seed-bearing heads, another caused by a fungus growing within the stalk, and the third attacking the roots.

"The cloudy weather at present, when many hours of glorious sunshine are needed for the seeds to mature, will surely delay the crop, of which please take note.

"Taking everything into account, I consider that the average yield for the White Crystal Wax, and the White Bermuda, will not exceed sixteen to seventeen pounds of seed for every 100 pounds of onions planted. It may yet be less if disease continues spreading havoc in our poor fields. As regards the Red Bermuda, it is a more serious matter. I reckon that sixty-five to seventy per cent of this year's crop is irretrievably lost."

SAMPLES OF SEEDS.

Following its annual practice, the Treasury Department has issued the following instructions, dated July 25, to customs officials:

At the request of the Secretary of Agriculture, it is directed that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, 2-ounce samples of all importations of 100 pounds or more of grass, clover, and forage-plant seeds be prepared at the earliest practicable date after entry and forwarded to the seed laboratory, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., labeled with the names and addresses of consignors and consignees, name of seed as given in the invoice, and quantity of the consignment.

IN OKLAHOMA.

Harris Bros., boomers of Oklahoma, are responsible for the following report, dated July 29:

"The month ends with crop conditions excellent. Wheat and oats threshing is completed. Wheat runs from twenty-five to thirty bushels to the acre and oats around fifty bushels. All indications point to corn making fifty bushels to the acre or better. Early corn is made and the crop assured. Rain just at this time would benefit the late corn, although it is not suffering and is maturing satisfactorily. Cotton promises a big yield."

corn crop, in which I am most interested, from ten days to two weeks late, and a poor crop prospect. Our own contracted crops here in Ohio are at least two weeks late, and a poor stand, due to the cold weather of May and the fore part of June. Many fields had to be replanted and some crops were entirely lost. From the middle of June to July 10 we had splendid corn weather, and if we can get some rain from now on, with a late fall, we can make a fair showing on our contract orders."

RAILROAD GARDENERS.

The fourth annual meeting of the American Association of Railroad Gardeners will be called at Crawford hotel, Boston, September 5. An interesting three-days' program has been arranged, and while the membership is limited to those connected with the gardening department of American railroads, the meetings are open, and the program is so broad as to be of interest to all the gardening fraternity.

One feature of the work is to place competent men in vacancies and on new work, and it will be of advantage to any who desire to take up this class of gardening to get in touch with the secretary, J. S. Butterfield, Lee's Summit, Mo.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Business has been far better than might be expected at this time of the year. Of course the most of it is funeral work, but an occasional wedding order creeps in to change the regular routine of work. The greatest difficulty is in getting flowers with which to fill the orders.

Club Meeting.

The meeting August 1 was held in what will undoubtedly be the regular meeting place of the club, in the basement of 112 Farmer street.

Officers for the ensuing year were elected, as follows: President, George E. Browne; vice-president, Herman Knope; secretary, H. Schroeter; treasurer, Robert Rahaley; librarian, Harry Pickworth. Six ballots for president were taken and J. F. Sullivan elected, but he respectfully but firmly declined.

Vice-president-elect N. Knope invited the club to hold the next meeting at Breitmeyer's Mack avenue greenhouses, where he is in charge. The date of meeting was changed from Monday, September 5, to August 29.

A long letter was read from President Charles H. Plumb, who is now in Europe. State Vice-president Bloy again urged all members to attend the convention. Mr. Bloy announced that the Detroit delegation will leave for Rochester Monday, August 15, at 5 p. m. on the D. & B. line steamer. All out-of-town florists who can conveniently do so are invited to join the Detroit party. Notify Mr. Bloy, so that he can secure berths on the boat.

George Stevens, of Walkerville, was elected a member. H. S.

Conneaut, O.—The flower store of H. G. Gray was purchased by L. A. Eaton, and not by the Misses Evans, as previously reported. Besides the store at 190 Main street, Mr. Eaton has greenhouses at 123 Center street.

The ground does not cake and crack, but keeps soft and porous, letting in the air necessary to the rapid growth of plants. The labor saved in one year will pay for the entire cost of the System.

Vegetable Forcing.

ASHTABULA GROWERS.

Reports from the large vegetable growing district at Ashtabula, O., are of an encouraging character. The greenhouses are still shipping some tomatoes, but cukes are the principal crop at present. Several growers report the season so far as highly satisfactory, considering the long, expensive, cold winter and spring.

There are a number of large growers near Ashtabula, and among them are the Griswold Greenhouse Co., Jos. Rice, manager; R. W. Griswold, Dunbar & Hopkins, Sherman H. Luce, Gallop Bros., Fishel & Willis, Ashtabula Greenhouse Co. and Adams & Sons. E. A. Dunbar is sales manager of the Ashtabula Lettuce Growers' Association. Besides lettuce, cukes and tomatoes, radishes and rhubarb are also grown.

STRIPED CUCUMBER BEETLES.

Will you please let me know how I can get rid of the small beetles, a sample of which I am sending to you? They are on my cucumber vines. I applied slaked lime, but it does not seem to keep them off. They are small bugs, about one-eighth of an inch long, and are black, with yellow stripes. Also, will you give me the name of some good, reliable house where I can get some hardy plant seed? L. S.

The pests are the common melon or cucumber beetles. They are usually kept in check by dusting the young plants with air-slaked lime, putting a liberal handful around each hill, on the ground, and renewing it after each rain. If it is thrown forcibly, much of the dust will collect on the leaves, which makes it unpleasant for the beetles and they prefer to eat somewhere else.

They can be poisoned by using Paris green or arsenate of lead, but Paris green will injure the leaves if made too strong. Arsenate of lead is better, as it sticks to the foliage longer and does not injure the tender leaves.

Any of the seedsmen who advertise in The Review are reliable and should be able to furnish good seed of best varieties. H. G.

The Market.

Business is satisfactory for this season of the year. The supply of flowers is not large and nearly all are quickly taken up by the buyers. The prices, although some have been shaded, run as a whole about the same as at the last writing.

The request for roses equals the supply. American Beauties, owing no doubt to their comparatively good quality, are insufficient to fill orders. Gladioli and asters are more plentiful; in fact, the poorer grades of the former show a tendency to accumulate. Hardy hydrangeas have been good stock all week. Excellent Easter lilies and some speciosums are offered. The supply of nymphæas equals the demand. Enough decorative greens are on hand to meet all requests.

Various Notes.

A meeting of the Florists' Society will be held on Monday evening, August 8.

The following Cincinnatians intend to go to the S. A. F. convention at Rochester: Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Peterson and Roger Peterson, Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Kyrk, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Walke, C. E. Critchell, Albert Sunderbruch, H. Greensmith, Roy Murphy, Al. Heckman, Frank Westrich, and the Misses Edith Kyrk and Laura Pfeiffer.

PACIFIC COAST.

Los Angeles, Cal.—The park commission has presented to the budget committee a request for an appropriation of $337,065 for carrying on the work of the city park department during the ensuing year. It is the intention to use $167,065 of this sum for improvements, including the erection of a $30,000 conservatory in Eastlake park.

PORTLAND, ORE.

The Market.

Business for the last fortnight has been unusually dull, but this is the natural sequence of conditions that are expected at this particular season. The weather has been quite hot and dry and therefore the forces are busy keeping field stock going. Filling of the carnation benches is rapidly going on, causing a scarcity of cut flowers.

Auratums and rubrums are in normal supply. Asters are showing better quality. Sweet peas are a drug on the market. Roses are of fair quality. Palms and ferns are moving slowly; yet the quality is up to the standard.

Various Notes.

The annual convention of the A. O. H. was held here last week and the members were lavishly entertained by the Commercial Club. The color scheme of the decorations was white and green, with a central arrangement of an Irish harp, done in appropriate colors.

N. B. Healy, of the Routledge Seed & Floral Co., is enjoying a vacation of several weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Clarke are spending some time in California, combining business with pleasure.

Felix Verhoeven has returned from an extended trip abroad and will hereafter devote his entire time to the real estate business at Forest Grove.

E. R. Chappell is spending two weeks' vacation in Canada, in search of a much needed rest.

Tom Lake, of Max M. Smith's, spends all his leisure time yachting. Recently he was capsized on the Columbia river, with a party of friends, and except for his quick and energetic efforts the party would have been drowned.

John Willius, of Danville, Ill., stopped here a few days to call on the local florists. E. R. C.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The weather has turned still cooler and wearing an overcoat is almost compulsory, both in the morning and evening. This is not exactly what we expect at this time, but it is a welcome relief to the public and it is favorable both to the grower and to the retailer in the handling of stock. There has been quite a perceptible improvement in the quality of flowers for some time, and the cooler weather admits of better color and stiffer stems.

Business in a general way shows some improvement, and the opening of the schools and the returning of the town folks from various outings is a great help to the florist. The prices of stock, although still well down on the card, show symptoms of climbing. Still, it is hard to see what will justify much advance in the face of the fact that asters are commencing to be brought into town in good quantities and mums are only a few weeks distant. Roses are good, considering the season, and the retailers have had no difficulty in filling orders with fair stock.

Sweet peas are a thing of the past and the public is tiring of them. Dahlias and gladioli are in good quantity and quality and move nicely. Amaryllis have come into market and form an agreeable change. Orchids are not in excessive supply and are quickly bought up. From present indications, we may expect a fair autumn season, which will soon be upon us.

Various Notes.

C. P. Braslan has returned from his European trip.

About 400 florists and their wives and sweethearts attended the outing at Camp Taylor, July 24. It was originally intended to hold the picnic at Santa Cruz, but the committee changed in favor of the other locality.

The Pacific Floral Co., of Berkeley, is erecting a plant house, 20x75 feet, in the rear of its University avenue store.

H. Plath, of Ocean View, is erecting a large barn and wagon shed, these improvements being necessary in his rapidly increasing business.

Within the last month three retail flower stores have gone out of business in San Francisco. They were small con-

THOSE S. A. F. AMENDMENTS.

person expected to devote any great amount of time to its work and should be placed in position so that he would be dependent for reappointment on the directors, who are closely associated with him and have a thorough knowledge as to the quality of his work. It seems to the writer that it should be the policy of the society to get the services of the best man obtainable and to keep him in office continuously. A new man in the secretary's office cannot possibly pick up all the details and be in position to give the society the best work of which he is capable, until he has had one or more years' experience. There are also many times when, if he carries out his duties with sole reference to the best interests of the society, he must offend some of the members. If he is subject to reëlection by popular vote, the temptation to the average man will be to let the interests of the society "go hang" when it is a case of securing the support of a possibly influential man for his reëlection, as against making that same man an active worker against him. It would seem a reasonable proposition that the best service from a secretary will be secured by removing any temptation for him to mix up in politics or identify himself with political factions, which will certainly be the case if the office continues to be an elective one and the incumbent wishes to hold it for any length of time.

The president is frequently a new man, who has had no service on the executive board and is entirely unfamiliar with the working machinery of the society, and he is compelled to rely largely on the knowledge and experience of the secretary, and both are handicapped when the secretary is a new man and lacking in experience. A good secretary is like certain spirituous liquors; if not compelled to constantly play politics, he is sure to steadily grow better with age. I speak at the present time from personal experience, knowing how much (although I have seen four years' service on the executive board) I was compelled to rely on the thorough knowledge of the society's conditions possessed by Mr. Stewart, not only by reason of his great ability, but also through his long service. The contrast was impressed upon me most forcibly when recently I came to fill the position of secretary under President Traendly and to realize how my lack of experience in the details of the office made me less helpful to President Traendly and less useful to the society.

The amendment to Article 5 is with the intent of giving the society the privilege of saying when it shall meet, as well as where. Under the present conditions, no matter how necessary it might be for the interests of the society to change the date of the meeting for even one week, it could not be done unless a formal notice to change the by-laws had been gotten up some months in advance and all the rest of the red tape had been gone through with. The argument has been advanced that we ought not to make this change because it has always been the other way. This seems to me about as poor an argument, either for or against any proposition, as one could possibly bring up. I cannot see why we may not as safely trust ourselves, when we are assembled in annual convention, to decide what time we shall meet as to decide where we shall meet. There will be nothing to prevent our continuing to meet at the same time in August as heretofore unless the majority of the society should wish to meet at another time, and whenever the majority of the society wishes to change the date it certainly seems that we should give ourselves the privilege of doing so.

The last amendment contemplates the changing of the fee for life membership from $25 to $50. This has been repeatedly thrashed out and voted down, but it still seems to me that $25 is an absurdly small fee for life membership and I feel quite confident, in looking over the present list of life members, that there are but few of them who would not have taken the life membership just as willingly at a $50 fee as at a $25 one.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Officers for 1910-11: Pres., W. P. Stark, Louisiana, Mo.; Vice-pres., E. S. Welch, Shenandoah, Ia.; Sec'y, John Hall, Rochester, N. Y.: Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. Thirty-sixth annual meeting, St. Louis, June 1911.

THE death of Henry J. Bowden, Rochester, N. Y., is recorded in this week's obituary column.

THIS week's obituary column contains a report of the death of George H. Sheppard, a nurseryman of Lamonte, Mo.

E. Y. TEAS & SON, Centerville, Ind., say that "the season has been awfully, terribly dry," and that growth of nursery stock is deficient.

JAMES A. LAKE, manager for the Huntington Beach Nursery Co., at Huntington Beach, Cal., is making a three months' trip, in company with his wife, to Guernsey, England, Mr. Lake's former home. They will also call at Paris, France, and visit the different countries in the British isles.

THE offices of the Elliott Nursery Co., in Pittsburg, Pa., were entered on the night of July 22 by burglars, who exploded the safe and secured $200 in cash, two gold watches and $8 in stamps. The burglary was not discovered till the following morning, when J. W. Elliott, president of the company, found the safe in ruins.

STUMPP & WALTER CO., New York, were sustained July 15 by the board of general appraisers in their protest that Abies Nordmanniana is dutiable at $1 per thousand, plus fifteen per cent ad valorem, as evergreen seedlings, instead of twenty-five per cent ad valorem as nursery stock, as classified. This was a hold-over protest made under the tariff law of 1897, which was superseded a year ago by the present law.

TREE BLEEDING.

Enclosed are three leaves from one of my shade trees. Can you tell me what to do for it? The sap is running out in all the different large joint places. I covered it with a heavy coat of whitewash, but it does not help. I do not like to lose the tree and would be glad to hear of some remedy.

G. A. B.

Examine the various joints and see if they show any signs of being cracked. If they do, it will be necessary to bolt the limbs together, afterwards brushing coal tar over the cracks to keep out water. If there are no apparent cracks or openings, take a brush or rough piece of cloth to remove the moisture and then apply a good dressing of coal tar to the part from which moisture appears to be exuding.

Coal tar is an excellent cleanser and keeps water out better than any of the

These 2-year-old plants we will sell for $3.00 per 100, $25.00 per 1000. Packing free. Strictly cash with order to persons unknown to us. Samples sent on request. All shipments are made in close cases and all orders, large or small, get the very best attention.

Our 1-year-old plants are very fine and will run over 18 inches, well branched. We will sell this grade for $1.50 per 100; $12.00 per 1000; 500 at above rates. Packing free; cash with order.

EVILS OF THE REPLACE POLICY.

[A paper read by J. R. Mayhew, of Waxahachie, Tex., before the American Association of Nurserymen at the Denver convention, continued from the Review of July 28.]

After reviewing the reason for taking up the question of policy in replacing stock at less than full price, Mr. Mayhew continued:

The Best Business Asset.

But why should there be so much effort on the part of a few for reform along this line? Let us look into some of its baneful results. The greatest asset you can possess in business is the confidence of your patrons, and any policy that tends to destroy that confidence rather than stimulate it, is an evil. The policy of replace at less than full value has left in the minds of patrons an impression that nursery stock is of questionable value, that the cost of production is so low that nurserymen can afford to guarantee customers against loss occasioned by neglect, ignorance, droughts, freezes, etc.; that the nurserymen could make money, in other words, if the half price should apply rather than the price catalogued, for most retailers have tied on to the policy of replace at half price.

Why does this create in the mind of a patron a question concerning the true worth of our product? Simply because he is of sane mind and recognizes that in no other line of business does this insane practice hold good. He knows he could not afford to sell a horse or cow for its true worth and guarantee said animal to live, or, in case of death, replace with one just as good at one-half the original price. The customer thinks, and being stimulated to judge us by this policy, arrives at the conclusion that we charged him too much in the first place, or that there is a "nigger in the wood-pile." Either suggestion tends to destroy confidence, the basis of satisfactory trade relations between the buyer and seller.

We, and not the customer, are responsible for the way he feels toward our business, for we have furnished fuel to feed his fire of prejudice, furnished this fuel without money and without price, and some of us wonder why there is this want of confidence. If we had spent a few moments considering the result of this practice, surely our conclusions would not have been different from the customer's.

PROVIDENCE.

The Market.

And now it's asters! They are coming in plentifully and the demand is satisfactory. Sweet peas are still popular, but the fancy ones are passing for the season. Carnations are off crop, but roses are in good form. There was an acceleration of business on Saturday, July 30, from the conducting of Carnation day for the benefit of Emily S. Chase Memorial Home at Oakland Beach, where children from this city are given fresh-air vacations during the summer.

Various Notes.

John Hays, of Henry A. Dreer, Inc., of Philadelphia, is with his family at Newport for the summer season.

Nathan D. Pierce, of the Norwood Greenhouses, has installed a new gasoline pump at his range, upon which he will depend for his water supply. The new apparatus is a powerful one and draws the water out of an artesian well ninety feet deep, carries it along the service for a distance of 300 feet and then lifts it up into a tank a distance of thirty-three feet. The capacity of the pump is fourteen gallons per minute. The installing of the new pump does away with the old windmill, which has been a familiar sight in that section for the last quarter of a century.

H. Howard Pepper, proprietor of the Melrose Rose Gardens, of this city, has been promoted from assistant secretary to assistant treasurer of the Industrial Trust Co.

J. A. Budlong & Son Co. is throwing out the carnations and replacing them with violets at the range at Auburn.

Charles Hunt is busy putting in new glass to replace that broken in his Burnside street houses in the heavy hail storm of several weeks ago.

W. H. Warburton, of Fall River, was in the city a few days ago purchasing supplies, in the absence of his father, C. Warburton, who has gone abroad.

John C. Caswell, with the W. E. Barrett Co., is on vacation for two weeks.

Johnston Bros. had several large pieces for the funeral of Rev. Henry W. Rugg, grand master of the Grand Commandery, Knights Templar of the United States, in this city last week.

John P. Hammond has been reappointed to a five-year term on the park commission of Newport by Acting Mayor William Shepley.

The Market.

W. H. Culp & Co. report that trade conditions in this locality shared with the rest of the country in the effects of the peculiar spring and early summer season. However, a general summing up shows that a good business was totaled for the season, with records broken for Easter, Mother's day and Memorial day.

Business carried up well through June, but the midsummer dullness is surely here now. There is nothing being done except occasional funeral work, and stock is none too plentiful or good for that.

The protracted dry spell, which remains unbroken, has nearly ruined the outdoor flower crops, such as asters, etc., as it seems impossible, even with continuous watering, to hold stock in a growing and flowering condition with temperatures running from 102 to 105 degrees every day for a week, with a strong wind blowing as if from a furnace and with the humidity as low as 22 at times. However, there is some prospect of a rain before long.

The general damage to crop conditions has been great. Corn and fruit have suffered to an almost incalculable degree.

NEW ORLEANS.

The Market.

For several weeks the weather has been quite rainy, cutting down the supply of flowers, though these, however, do not usually look extra bright here at this time of the year. Single tuberoses are now the most acceptable flowers for general work. Roses are badly burned by frequent showers and hot sunshine, and the aster crop has only a brief existence in this locality. Chrysanthemum plants alone seem to like the weather, and so far nothing has been reported against this important crop.

Various Notes.

At U. J. Virgin's it is noticed that the Ficus nitida is coming again into favor as a decorative plant. It was formerly used extensively, before the more graceful palms took the lead. In fact, it is a remarkably bright evergreen, standing any kind of abuse, and is well adapted for a background decoration, if nothing else. A lot of Areca lutescens, planted on benches in the greenhouse, look fine—far better, indeed, than the outdoor stock, as generally seen in this vicinity.

R. E. Simon, the new vice-president of the New Orleans Horticultural Society, has long been a member of the florists' trade and is now connected with the Metairie Ridge Nursery. He has had a wide experience and will be a valuable assistant to the new board. M. M. L.

West Grove, Pa.—D. H. Green has sold out to Allen R. Brown and removed to his old home at Boonsboro, Md.

TUNE—JOHN BROWN'S BODY

In the early morning's sunlight upon the sea I go
To search the lands of Europe for the finest plants that grow.
I only buy the very best, those only you must know
Are good enough for me.

In the towns of little Belgium there are Araucarias fair,
And Azaleas with their promise of enchanting beauty rare.
I mean to beat the world with my shipment over there,
Just good enough for me.

I leave at home in my own house the loveliest Ferns on earth,
And mean to match them with tall Palms of quite transcendent worth.
My Cyclamen and Primroses I've tended from their birth—
All good enough for me.

When I come home I want you all to come and see my show,
The sight of my Lorraines will set your heart and eyes aglow;
Their health and beauty, bloom and leaf—then only will you know
What's good enough for me.

EMPTY HOUSES WON'T PAY.

Now is your time to fill your empty houses with something that will grow into money for you while you sleep. Araucarias will do it. Please look at our special low prices for superior stock.

EVANSVILLE, IND.

The Market.

Summer dullness prevails here. Work for a few funerals is about all there is to do. Roses and carnations are poor. Sweet peas are about gone, while other outdoor flowers are being ruined by excessive rains. The rainfall for July was 10.32 inches, with rain on twenty-three days during the month.

A Visit to Blackman's.

A visit to the greenhouses of the Wm. Blackman Floral Co. found the summer work moving along in good style. The old roses are being dried off and will soon be in shape to start growing again.

The new house, planted to roses in April, shows good growth. The roses are Bride, Bridesmaid and White Killarney. The house of young Beauties is coming finely. Between two houses a sash house has been built, with one side open to the weather, and has been planted to My Maryland roses, which are now full of buds and looking well. Plenty of flowers will be got from these this month.

Three houses have been planted to carnations and two more houses are about ready to plant. The chrysanthemums are in a healthy condition.

MINNEAPOLIS.

The Market.

Summer dullness still pervades the city. There is little demand for stock, and little stock to get. Kaiserin, My Maryland and Pink Killarney are blooming profusely. Carnations are scarce. Sweet peas are more or less plentiful. It is feared that asters will be a failure, though some are growing them with success, but not in the quantities heretofore experienced. Amateur gardeners in such stock have failed utterly.

Various Notes.

The Minnesota State Florists' Association held its picnic July 26, at Wildwood, and had a most successful, enjoyable outing. A large crowd repaired early in the morning by street car to the place appointed, and spent the day in games and lake trips, ending with dancing in the evening. O. J. Olson, Louis Boeglein and J. P. Jorgenson were the committee on arrangements.

Visitors: B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia.

SEEDS.

A limited quantity of Steele's Mastodon pansy seed is again offered. It is grown in Oregon. We don't include the word "giant" in describing our pansies because all pansies are "giants," see newspapers, journals and magazines. But when it comes to size, color, form and substance, we must have all four qualities because 90 per cent of our income is from the sale of PLANTS IN BLOOM. That is the reason why we grow pansy seed. We sow and sell from the same sack. 1/12 oz., $1.00.
Steele's Giant Pansy Gardens, Portland, Oregon.

PAPER WHITES AND HYACINTHS.

Will you kindly inform us how to make our plantings of Paper Whites and hyacinths, both Dutch and Roman, so as to have a succession of bloom for the winter? M. & J.

Paper White narcissi usually arrive from the middle of August until the early part of September. Roman hyacinths (French grown) arrive about the same time. Each of these should be planted in flats containing four inches of soil. A convenient sized flat is 4x12x24. This will hold fifty bulbs of either the narcissi or hyacinths. The narcissi after boxing can be stood in a cold-frame and covered with board shutters to prevent the soil drying out, or placed on a cellar floor. The hyacinths should have a dark place. If in the light, they will be better covered with two or three inches of fine cinders. The bulbs need not all be placed in the soil at once. Leave some out for, say, six weeks, keeping the bulbs as cool and dry as possible. It is easy keeping up a succession of both bulbs. Once they are well rooted they will stand forcing, but the Paper Whites come stronger if grown in a temperature of 50 degrees, while the hyacinths can be given 10 to 15 degrees more, moving them to cooler quarters as they open.

Paper Whites may be had early in November and Roman hyacinths by Thanksgiving. The Paper White flats can be placed below the benches and lifted up to the light as they open. By keeping them in a cold cellar and bringing in weekly batches, a long succession can be had. The same holds good of Roman hyacinths.

Dutch hyacinths will not bloom satisfactorily before the middle or end of January, and a succession may be had until April. We like to cover the flats with cinders and give them occasional waterings before housing them. The batches first housed are liable to come short-stemmed, unless after housing they are kept for a few days in a warm, dark case, to draw them up somewhat. Before starting them they should be well rooted and have top growths two to two and one-half inches long. Soak all bulbs thoroughly after planting and it will be necessary to give them additional waterings before forcing. Even if the surface soil may seem damp, that below will be comparatively dry. Watch later issues of The Review, which will contain frequent references to these bulbs and their culture. C. W.

PIERSON'S NEIGHBORS.

The honorable president of the S. A. F. moves in aristocratic circles, as witness the evidence of the clipping reproduced below, which links his name with that of the kings of finance:

"William Rockefeller, Frank A. Vanderlip, James Speyer, V. Everit Macy and several other New York millionaires are angry with the village of Ossining. A short time ago Frank R. Pierson, the largest grower of American Beauty roses in this country, gave the village authorities permission to dump its garbage in a cove which he owns at Scarborough, where the said millionaires live.

"One day, when the wind was blowing from the cove, there came a smell which caused the financial noses to turn up and moved some of them to remark that Pierson had neglected his roses and they were spoiling on his hands. But Pierson hadn't. It was the garbage they smelled. A protest has been made and the denizens of Scarborough are seriously considering suing the village of Ossining."—New York World.

Greenhouse Heating.

THE best form of insurance a greenhouse owner can take on at this particular time is a big stock of coal. Under present conditions, and in the light of last season's experience, it is almost foolhardy to let cold weather find no stock of coal on the place.

OPEN AIR COAL STORAGE.

Last season's fuel famine was so vital with many florists that they are protecting themselves this season by getting on the place, before cold weather, as large a stock of coal as their storage sheds will permit. In some cases, where storage space is lacking, the coal will be dumped on the ground. There is one objection to the open air storage of bituminous coal: It deteriorates in quality through slaking. To avoid this, build up the outdoor coal pile as compactly as possible and cover the lump coal with fine screenings. The screenings keep out the air, and with this protection the deterioration is slight.

UNDERGROUND SUPPLY PIPE.

Kindly let me know whether it is possible to change the supply line from my boiler to the greenhouse. The boiler house is some distance from the greenhouse, and on lower ground. At present the supply pipe rises gradually from the boiler to the lower part of the greenhouse or office. Hence the pipe is outside, and, though boxed up, it still loses a great deal of heat. Besides, it does not add any to the looks of the place. I should like to lay the pipe two feet below the ground, in tile. Is this practicable, or would there be trouble on account of water collecting at the lowest point? I am located in southwestern Pennsylvania. M. B. S.

If a drip pipe can be run from the flow pipe to the return, at the point where the upward bend is made, there will be no trouble from the backing up of water in the proposed method of running the supply pipe.

THE COAL SITUATION

Coal men say that the average greenhouse owner has not waked up to the dangers of the present situation in the coal market. The forehanded growers, who have not forgotten the anxious days of last winter, are buying coal and getting it on the place; they will have large supplies and maintain them against a time of need. But the happy-go-lucky man is doing nothing. Coal men say delays are dangerous.

Usually at this season the salesmen for the fuel firms are circulating among the florists, urging them to buy coal; the anxiety is all on the part of the coal man, who has cars on track and no place to put them. Such is not the case this year, nor has it been the case at any time during the summer. In the Illinois fields mining has been almost at a standstill for many weeks. It is estimated that the full capacity output in Illinois is 300,000 tons per week. With this enormous quantity removed from the market, there has been a place ready and waiting for every car that has come into the market from fields where operations have been steadily conducted. The result has been that there was no pressure to get people to take coal they did not immediately need.

It was expected that the Illinois mines would start up this week, but the miners have rejected the arrangement made by the president of their union with the mine operators and the resumption of production is not yet in sight. When the mines start it will be some days before a full output can be attained. This hardly can occur before the active fall demand will arise.

A further factor is the prospect of car shortage. Even with many mines idle, there are fewer idle cars than there were at this date last year. When all the mines are again going full capacity, there is certain to be a car shortage. If at the same time there comes unfavorable weather to retard the

The coal men who have regular customers among florists are now beginning to put in the florists' stocks. They are informing their customers that prudence demands stocking up to the limit; that nothing whatever is to be gained by waiting, and that the greenhouse owner who counts on the hand-to-mouth policy carrying him through the approaching winter will see many an anxious day.

TO MAINTAIN AN EVEN TEMPERATURE IN YOUR GREENHOUSES, USE A

Foster Pressure Regulator

With this simple device attached to your steam main just inside the greenhouse the pressure on the heating coils will be absolutely constant, anywhere from 1 to 15 pounds (whatever the grower sets the Regulator at), no matter how the pressure on the boilers runs up and down.

If the weather changes, or the sun heat varies, instead of turning on more pipes, just turn a nut on the Regulator, and get more steam, or less steam, at once. Made in sizes from ¾-inch to 10-inch just for this work.

east wall is four and one-half feet high, with three feet of concrete and eighteen inches of glass. The west side will be connected to a house with a 6½-foot wall. I wish to heat this house to 50 degrees in zero weather, in this Ohio climate. I should like to use 4-inch cast-iron pipe for flows and returns. My boiler is an upright. Will it be necessary to tap it for 4-inch flows and 4-inch returns, as it is tapped now for only 2½-inch flows and 2-inch returns? The top of the boiler is eighteen inches below the return pipes. C. A. B.

While it is better to use smaller pipe than 4-inch for hot water heating, it will be possible to secure the temperature mentioned in a house 15x60 feet by using two 4-inch flow pipes and four 4-inch returns, provided the boiler is sufficiently large. For a house of the size mentioned, it will answer if each flow is connected with the boiler by means of a 2½-inch pipe, and each return by means of a 2-inch pipe.

A SMALL VIOLET HOUSE.

I have a small greenhouse in which I intend to try growing violets. The house is 8x15 feet, and five feet six inches to the ridge. Can you tell me of some way to heat it inexpensively? The outside temperature in this part of Colorado sometimes goes as low as 15 degrees below zero. C. A.

The house can be readily heated by using fifty square feet of radiating surface, but just how the pipes should be run cannot be definitely told without knowing something of the arrangement of the house. A simple method of piping for hot water, which would probably give the best results for so small a house, would be to use one 1½-inch flow pipe on each side of the house, with two 1½-inch returns connected to each flow. For the house mentioned, a heater rated for seventy-five square feet of radiating surface will be desirable.

UNSATISFACTORY PIPING.

I have a greenhouse forty-eight feet long, from east to west, by thirty feet wide. It is ten feet high at the highest part, sloping eight feet to the north and twenty-two feet to the south. The west and north walls are wood. On the north side of the house is a lean-to eight feet wide, which is used as a boiler room and workroom. The hot water heater rests on a cement founda-

I had my book-keeper compare my coal bill of last with that of this year and I find a saving of one quarter the amount of this year's coal over last year's; also the past winter was a great deal colder and longer than the winter before.

IF YOU SHOULD VISIT the [illegible] of the well-known "Kroeschell Boiler," you would be very [illegible] large number of boilers finished on orders and ready for shipment. Recently there were sixty odd of these boilers finished awaiting shipment, with as many more under construction.

One of their latest models, the No. 16, was being shipped. This is claimed to be the largest hot water boiler ever built, having a capacity of 80,000 square feet of glass for carnations at zero.

The economy of a large single unit as compared with several smaller ones [illegible] proven to be very great, not alone in fuel consumption and the original cost of the boiler, but also in the way of labor in attending to the firing. Many concerns are installing one large Kroeschell Boiler to do the work of two or more smaller boilers, and the large sizes have become very popular, the Eastern demand being extremely heavy. Recently a number of these large sizes were shipped into the Northwestern territory, Vancouver, B. C. and neighborhood. They have a very large trade in these boilers in the cold northwest territory, where they are also used in heating Office Buildings, Hotels, Stores, etc.

The demand for smaller boilers than the No. 1 Kroeschell Boiler for small ranges, as well as for residences, has induced them to add to their list four smaller sizes, "A," "B," "C" and "D," ranging in capacity from 2,250 square feet of glass to 4,500 square feet of glass. They now build twenty-two sizes of their Hot Water Boiler, ranging in capacity from 2,250 to 80,000 square feet of glass, enabling them to furnish boilers for ranges of any conceivable size.

It is very interesting to note the great care that is taken by this firm in the selection of the material, the construction of the boilers, and the excellent workmanship put on all their work.

The demand for Kroeschell Boilers has been very heavy, and during the past four years, the Kroeschell Hot Water Greenhouse Boiler has been installed to heat over 9,000,000 SQUARE FEET OF GLASS. This does not include the Kroeschell Steam Boilers, of which they also sold many, to be used in greenhouses.

Their records show sales very much in excess of last year at this time, and at the present rate their business will show an increase of fully fifty per cent over last year's sales.

"WHAT THE USERS SAY"

The No. 9 Boiler we bought of you is heating 15,000 square feet of glass. We have no trouble to keep up temperatures of 60 degrees for rose houses and 52 degrees for carnation section in the coldest weather. Your boiler has given entire satisfaction. We also have a cast iron 9 sectional boiler, but prefer the Kroeschell. This has been the coldest winter we have had in years and we burned less coal than usual. We use your Generator and believe it helps the circulation.

I do not have any trouble to keep up temperature of 50 degrees in the coldest weather. I fire only once after 12 o'clock midnight. The boiler has given perfect satisfaction. I have four cast iron boilers—like the "Kroeschell" the best of all. If any one wishes to inquire about your boiler, let them write me, for I think your boilers are good ones.

There are three 2-inch couplings on the boiler, but the heater men, in installing the heating apparatus, have used only one coupling, running four feet to a header, with ten 1¼-inch pipes running from the header around the sides of the house into another header and returning to the heater. The heater stands near the east end of the lean-to.

Last winter, when the thermometer registered 4 degrees above zero outside, the temperature in the house was 28 degrees, with 187 degrees on the heater. I want the house piped to give 55 or 60 degrees at night. Will you advise me how the house should be piped? I do not use benches. On the north, east and west sides the pipes are arranged one above the other. On the south side they are placed on a slant with the roof and as near the glass as possible, so as not to interfere with the bed on that side, as the roof comes within three feet of the bed on the south side. erly placed, but the heater men in this city do not understand greenhouse piping. Therefore I should much appreciate your kindness if you would inform me just how this house should be piped. I am located in New York state. C. H. H.

If they run around the four sides of the house, the ten 1¼-inch pipes will supply an abundance of radiating surface, but the pipes should have been of a larger size for so long a run. The great trouble, however, is in the use of too small a connection between the boiler and the coils. There should have been three connections at least, and four would have been better. Even by using the full number of connections, it is doubtful whether a satisfactory circulation can be secured, unless a closed system is used, with the present arrangement of the coils.

The best way of arranging the heating system would be to use three 2½-inch flow pipes, running one on each wall and one near the center of the house to the west end, and connecting each flow with five 2-inch return pipes.

BUFFALO.

The Market.

An unusual amount of funeral work for this season helped nearly everybody last week. Social functions are few and there is little call for flowers aside from this. Sweet peas are sold in large quantities, owing to the low price. Asters are on the market, but as yet are quite short-stemmed. Gladioli are not so plentiful and the market keeps cleaned up.

Florists' Picnic.

On Wednesday, July 27, the banner picnic of the Buffalo Florists' Club was held at Fort Erie Beach. The attendance was the largest on record, 108 people sitting at the tables, and, in addition, some left after the games were run. The weather became threatening toward the end, but the boys kept right on and not a person left until the ball game was stopped by a shower. The games were run off quickly and the unnecessary delay, which usually occurs, was avoided. Hot competition followed in nearly all the events, which ended as follows:

Ladies' race—First, Miss Jensen; second, Mrs. Smith; third, Miss Berner.
Children's race, under 12 years—First, Vertie Slattery; second, Beulah Slattery; third, Harry Longley; fourth, Lydia Forbach.
Men's race—First, S. A. Anderson; second, L. Hock; third, E. Slattery.
Three-legged race—First, Grever-Walters; second, the Kinkle brothers.
Boys' race—First, Jimmy Zimmerman; second, J. Sautner; third, T. Tobin; fourth, Elmer Neber.
Young men's race—First, R. Kinkle; second, Roeder Kinkle; third, T. Tobin; fourth, R. Klockow.
Quarter-mile walk—First, Revere Kinkle; second, Arthur Hey; third, Russell Mark; fourth, E. Stunts.
Potato race—First, E. Walter; second, Roeder Kinkle; third, Revere Kinkle; fourth, E. Stuntz.
Running hop, step and jump—First, David Scott, 36 ft. 2 in.; second, R. E. Kinkle, 35 ft. 6 in.; third, Grever, 34 ft. 9 in.

The last two events on the program were the ball game and the tug of war. In each event the store men were pitted against the growers and everybody expected an easy victory for the growers in the latter event, but, unfortunately, Joe Streit had his dancing pumps on and the growers were much handicapped. The store men won the

The Market.

As far as business is concerned, there is absolutely nothing new to report. The store men have become sufficiently used to it by this time to content themselves with a funeral design or a wedding bunch for a day's business. Most of them are keeping busy by cleaning up their places, with new paper and paint, so as to be in shape for the early fall trade, to which we are all looking forward hopefully. The stock that is coming in is of poor quality and shows the effect of the exceedingly dry, hot summer. Asters are arriving and are mostly indoor stock of Queen of the Market, which seems to be blighted badly this season.

Various Notes.

The summer meeting of the Maryland State Horticultural Society was held at Berlin, July 28, and at Ocean City July 29. It was the largest meeting ever held by the society. When the train bearing the Baltimore and Washington delegates, nearly 600 members and friends, arrived, it was greeted by a committee composed of Orlando Harrison, H. G. Harrison and G. A. Harrison. There were addresses by Richard Vincent, Jr., George Morrison, president of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Baltimore, and Congressman J. Harry Covington. The Harrison Nurseries contain over 2,000 acres of fine land. They grow 200,000 apple, 200,000 pear, 300,000 peach, 150,000 cherry, 100,000 plum trees, 150,000 grape vines, over 100 acres in strawberry plants and twenty acres of asparagus roots.

Preparations for attending the annual convention of the S. A. F. formed one of the chief topics of discussion at the last meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, July 24. The bowling team will be on hand to try for more prizes, and this will be the strongest team ever sent to a convention. About thirty-five members will attend from Baltimore. Final arrangements will be made at the next meeting, August 8, for a special car. Q.

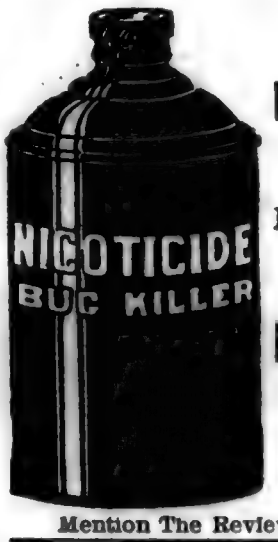
WHAT S. J. GODDARD SAYS.

FRAMINGHAM, MASS., January 15, 1910.

Gentlemen:—

It gives me a great deal of pleasure at this time to tell you that I am perfectly satisfied with your construction. We have just experienced two very bad blizzards. One of them was very severe and the house never so much as trembled. In fact, it is the stiffest house on my place and you know I have the best of construction on the others.



Wish you every success.

Yours very truly,

"A PERFECT GREENHOUSE HOSE"

FURNISHED in continuous lengths of 500 feet. An exceptionally high grade hose manufactured with a woven jacket insertion instead of cotton duck, and with specially selected rubber in the inner tube and cover.

The woven jacket construction makes a stronger hose than can be obtained from cotton duck, and absolutely precludes the possibility of cover opening at seam—a common cause of failure of hose made on cotton duck. This construction also gives a more flexible hose and reduces the possibility of kinking.

"Magic" Hose is guaranteed to stand a pressure of 500 pounds per square inch, although its bursting pressure is far in excess of this.

COLUMBUS, O.

The Market.

Trade is rather quiet here at present. A spurt of funeral work now and then is about all that is doing, especially since the street car strike began, and what few deliveries we have are hard to get out. The cost of deliveries, too, is quite an item, for orders intended for the outlying districts are now taken on wagons, while a boy might jump on a car and deliver them for half the money. As it is, hardly anyone rides and it is unsafe to do so, on account of the numerous riots of the sympathizers. There are now almost 3,200 soldiers in Columbus and business is almost at a standstill.

There is but little stock coming in at present. Some fair carnations are still shipped in. Roses are of a little better grade, but are limited in supply. Asters are making their appearance, but are small; there is nothing but Queen of the Market, etc., at present, but the outlook is good for some fine stock shortly. Gladioli find a ready sale and are quite plentiful. Sweet peas are about done and the quality of them is such that they can hardly be moved at any price.

Various Notes.

Quite a number of the trade are away on their vacations and the forces at nearly all the stores and greenhouses are short several clerks. Those that have returned from their vacations all report a good time.

Judging from the outlook now, few people from this city will attend the convention. J. M.

Quincy, Ill.—The business formerly conducted by August Fischer will hereafter be known as the Woodland Floral Co., Mrs. A. Vorndam, proprietor.

The Market.

"Summer trade," answers all questions regarding business. There was a shortage of flowers for a few days, but even that is now a thing of the past. Carnations have almost disappeared, but who cares? They were not of much account, anyhow, and now there are plenty of asters and roses, which will take care of any orders that may appear.

The flower stores have a deserted look, most of the help keeping out of sight, just so they will not seem to be loafing.

Various Notes.

A. M. Murdoch, who has been the only florist on Fifth avenue for some years, doing business in what was probably the most valuable store per square foot in the city, has retired from business and rented his store to an eastern firm for a sum said to be $125,000 for a term of years.

Among those who are away on vacations are: Gilbert Weaklen and family, at Chautauqua Lake; J. B. Murdoch and family, at Atlantic City; T. P. Langhans and family, at Les Cheneaux Island, Mich. A. W. Smith, Jr., has a cottage at Chautauqua and spends the week-ends there with his family. Mr. Hall, with the A. W. Smith Co., is spending his vacation in the country.

Paul Randolph met with an accident which might have proved serious. He was under his car making some repair, when some one started the engine. He lost a little bark off his chin and got a scare; that was all.

Some of our city florists who have decorations out of town and haul the plants in automobiles, are saying what they think of the oiling system for macadamized roads, and it is not complimentary.

The prospects are for a large delegation to the S. A. F. convention at Rochester.

The business heretofore conducted under the name of E. C. Ludwig will be known as the E. C. Ludwig Floral Co.

W. A. Clarke and wife, of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., left July 30 for Chicago with the Knights Templars, where they will attend the triennial conclave, after which they will visit Milwaukee and Mackinac, returning by the way of Detroit.

Miss McKinley, of Randolph & McClements, is spending her vacation in Ohio.

THE STORY THIS TELLS

It tells that Lord & Burnham Co., in designing their greenhouses, must give almost endless attention to the details of making attractiveness and praticalness agree. Take this hooded entrance way for example; how much it adds to the interest and actual beauty of the house, yet what thoroughly consistent greenhouse building it is in every way!

It is easy enough to make a house very ornamental, but how will this affect the number of rose blooms in December? That's the vital point!

Back of the reputation you know we have for successful, enduring houses is our half century or more of work, backing up that reputation.

It is such facts that give you entire confidence in a concern, and transacting business with them is free from the customary anxieties and "come backs." Because of these facts we believe you will write us when you are ready to build.

Send for a set of Advance Pages from our New Catalogue. : : : : : : :

How to Save Money

No. 4

TAKE advice where it is good. The makers of greenhouse material are designing houses every day for all kinds of stock and purposes and they know what the growers in various parts of the country are doing. Everything new in construction and every advantage in building comes to their notice. You can many times save much money by asking for this advice before building. Your houses may not be operating as economically as they should and you may not get all the stock you should from your benches. Before you put up that new house write us for some information about construction.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

MURDOCH'S STORE.

It recently was reported in The Review that A. M. Murdoch, the Pittsburg retailer, had retired from business, leasing his store at a price which would make him independent, and the comment was subjoined that Mr. Murdoch's store probably brought the highest rental per square foot of any flower store in the country.

The accompanying illustration shows the building in which Mr. Murdoch has done business, at 252 Fifth avenue, Pittsburg, for the last fifteen years. The building is only 15x35 feet. The rental is over $10,000 per year, $125,000 for the term, and is at the rate of over $20 per square foot per year. Is there any other florist in the country who has done business in a store which would command so great a price? Who wonders that he should retire and live on his rent?

ESSENTIALS OF DESIGN.

The Stock and Its Arrangement.

We have been taught to believe that one-half and one-half make a unit, but as we grow older we are inclined to observe that even a mathematical truth may be altered in that a large half and a small half may make a more harmonious unit than if the accepted proportions were equal. The query often arises: What is a good design, or what are its essentials, simply stated?

Bearing in mind that a design means any combination of flowers, from a boutonniere to a wedding decoration, and that the derivation of the word itself hints that there is to be a marking out, a sign, an expression, there must be some idea or thought to be expressed.

Taking for granted that there must be some quality to the flowers or plants, there is but one other essential to any display, and that is arrangement. Thus simplified, our design must contain flowers somewhat notable for beauty or size, and must also show good arrangement. Let us discover which of these two essentials weighs the more in the discussion of the subject.

That the quality of the stock is an important consideration, say in a window decoration or a bride's bouquet, does not require lengthy argument. Excellence anywhere is its own recommendation. Extra good stock sells itself, other things being equal. But other things are not always equal. The market may be overcrowded, the season dull, and something must be added to the excellence of the stock to induce sales. This topic properly belongs to the latter part of our subject and will be considered later. Neither is it always possible to have stock of tiptop quality; average stock is what can be sold in everyday trade, and while excellence of quality is the ambition of every up-to-date grower, ideal stock is not met with every day, and we must make the best of what we have. On the other hand, we must avoid degrading fine stock by poor arrangement.

A Difficult Combination.

But somebody will suggest that while arrangement for display is important, some consideration must be given to good storage at the same time, and good storage and good arrangement are on the oil and water order,—they don't mix worth a cent. Flowers, to look well, must be loosely and individually arranged, and if pulled too far out of deep water they will suffer. This is all undoubtedly true, but we must expect a certain per cent of stock to be sacrificed for the sake of display and to sell the rest. Frequently, also, those flowers used for display, and which show deterioration, can be removed, placed deep in water over night and brought out again as good as new, or they may come in for immediate use in formal designs. A few extra steps and thoughts will make up the larger part of loss which comes in this way.

Store of A. M. Murdoch.

Passing on to the second essential of a good design, let us observe that good arrangement will sell stock of excellent quality more quickly and will emphasize the best points of common quality stock. Let us see what are the principal points in any good, correct arrangement. In the lifetime of a decorator, flowers or plants, to be well placed, must not be left to one style, often repeated, but should have the advantage of varied schemes.

To add to the value of excellent stock, to develop medium quality, to create value for poor stock, the following principles of design will be found necessary: First, lines or stems must come from a common source or series of sources; second, the coloring must be harmonious; third, there must be a limit to variety of form and color; fourth, there must be present some signs of individuality in the tone and expression of the completed piece.

Harmony of Outlines.

Returning to the first essential, the starting of all lines, or stems, from a common source or series of sources—in other words, form harmony—let us illustrate. In filling a handle basket, group the stems in, say, two places next and around the bases of the handle. Set the stems, short and long, close together, as though all were springing from one root, and flare them far apart at the flower ends, so that each group shall resemble a tree top. By the time two such groups are in, the basket will be about filled, with the exception of a little background of moss or ferns. Just for comparison, fill the basket as is ordinarily done, with every stem where there is room for it, and compare the results.

There is no kind of floral design where this principle will not hold true. Show me a well-arranged bride's bouquet, shower or armful effect, and I will show you where the charm of all its lines lies, and that is in their conformity to this cardinal principle of arrangement. They have the effect of all running back to one source if they were carried out. It is the same way with the easy grace of an armful arrangement; the stems all are directed to one point, and the tie, if one is used, should find its source here also.

Harmony of Color.

So much—but not too much—has been said about color harmony as a wide subject of itself, that it is not within the limits of this discussion to do it justice. One sees so many violations of the simplest rules of color, which, it seems, ought to be apparent to even the most casual student, that one is almost compelled to harp on the subject continually. Anybody can learn the rudiments of color and develop their practice to a reasonable extent. But he cannot do it by ignoring all he has learned and slapping into his window every old color that happens to be nearest.

African marigolds and Beacon carnations are the cats and dogs of color; yet three-fourths of self-styled "floral artists" have no conscience about displaying them close together. American Beauty, colored phloxes and Chatenay roses jar each other like a discharge of dynamite; yet every other window you see blinks like a pair of cross eyes with just such attempted combinations.

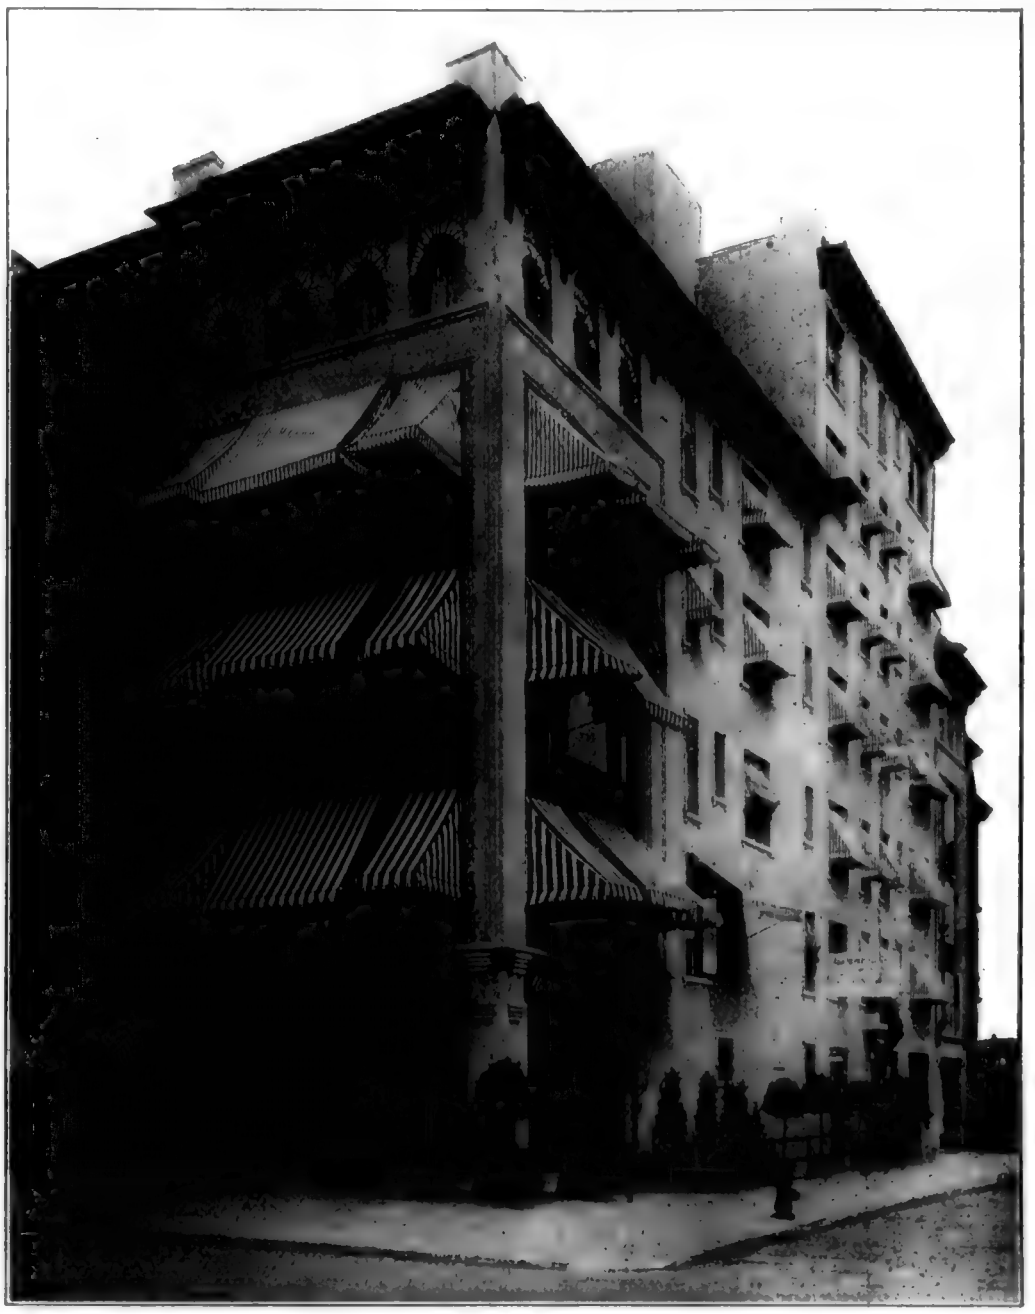
If without color tact, hire somebody who has a little of it. If it is really necessary to display flowers of inharmonius colors, separate them in some way, with one in front and the other as far away as possible—one prominent and the other retiring. Foliage of one kind and another is a good neutralizer for this kind of work.

Size and Form of Flowers.

The third topic of this list is, the limit of number of kinds and varieties to be used together. As with the color question, it is almost impossible to lay down definite rules governing the flowers which make harmonious combinations, so far as size and form are concerned. Usually flowers of about one size are best together. An exception to this is the employment of very large and very tiny flowers together, such as lilies and violets. Thus equal sizes and extremes of size are permissible, while those that are nearer alike in size may not be such desirable combinations, unless for other reasons.

For other than color reasons, American Beauties and daisies make a poor combination, having no similarity of form or style of foliage or flower. Roses and carnations are sometimes called for in sprays. While there is no special discord in their union, there is nothing whatever to commend it. Lilies with tulips or hyacinths are ideal. Phloxes and hydrangeas are equally good, provided the coloring is harmonious; so, also, are gladioli and hydrangeas, snapdragons and hydrangeas, asters and peas, snapdragons and peas, carnations and peas, daisies and carnations, and, for a delightful combination of extremes in size, auratums and peas. Where the extra large flowers and the extra small ones are used, do not mix without a fixed plan for their place in the design. Use them for a shower, over the stems, or along the edges, for embroidered effects on the wide chiffon loops or ends, or for bands or in place of ties.

The Element of Individuality.



The fourth requisite for a good design is the element of individuality, that which distinguishes one person's work from that of another. This consists not of some trifling mannerism repeated in every piece of work produced; it is not a pet style, but an unnamable speaking out of the personality, a giving of one's own thought, which, like one's personal habits of speech and demeanor, means yourself and nobody else.

Two things combine to produce individual work: First, an ability to analyze and understand the individuality in each flower and plant to be dealt with; second, the ability to make them speak your thoughts in the assemblage which is called the design. "All coons look alike to me." "Yes, and all roses of one variety look alike to me," says somebody. But all coons did not look alike to Uncle Remus; neither need all Killarneys look alike to the interested student.

The distribution of color, the set of the flower, the turn of the stem, its length, the angles of the leaves, the unfolding of the petals—these are a few things which determine the individuality of the flower. They have expressions, contenances and profiles.

Which half of this subject has the greater weight in a good design, is left to the discrimination of the reader.

THE BUNYARD STORE.

The accompanying illustration is reproduced from a recent photograph of the building in which is located the store of the A. T. Bunyard Floral Co., New York. Alfred T. Bunyard has for years been well known in the retail end of the business in New York, but it is only a year since he started in business for himself, at Madison avenue, where Forty-eighth street intersects. He has an up-to-date place and is making progress.

WHICH LINE PAYS BEST?

A reader of The Review who for obvious reasons shall remain nameless, but who is located in a town of 20,000 inhabitants and who does a business of from $10,000 to $12,000 per year, sends the following statement and inquiry:

"Owing to the growth of business and lack of room, we find that we shall soon be obliged to give up either our cut flower and design work or the growing and sale of bedding plants.

"The present business is divided as follows: Eighty per cent cut flowers and designs, twenty per cent plants, etc. We have eighty per cent of the local cut flower and design business and seventy per cent of the plant trade; have about 12,000 feet of glass and are centrally located; have four competitors, new and old.

"Local trade would not use all the plants we could grow and it would therefore necessitate some wholesaling. On the other hand, we would still be obliged to buy some of our cut flowers.

"The question with us is as to which branch is best to drop. While the cut flower end is the most confining, it is probably the best paying. We would like to get the opinion of some of the trade who have been obliged to take this same step, as to what the outcome has been. Which line is the most desirable and is our 12,000 feet of glass enough to make the wholesale growing of plants combined with local retail trade as paying a proposition as the cut flower end would be?

"Would you think that the dropping of the plant trade would materially affect our cut flower and design business?"

The Review is of the opinion that the proper course for this subscriber is to build more glass, even at the expense of a change in location. If readers who have met a similar problem will send in their views they will be published and, no doubt, read with interest by many besides those whose words are quoted above.

Uxbridge, Mass.—An addition is being built at the High Street Greenhouse and a new Kroeschell boiler has arrived.

Alexandria, Minn.—Mrs. Joseph Pennar says that business in all departments of the trade was better last season than ever before, and that she is looking for a further increase in the approaching season.

Harmony of Color.

So much—but not too much—has been said about color harmony as a wide subject of itself, that it is not within the limits of this discussion to do justice. One sees so many violations of the simplest rules of color, which, it seems, ought to be apparent to even the most casual student, that one is almost compelled to harp on the subject continually. Anybody can learn the rudiments of color and develop their practice to a reasonable extent. But he cannot do it by ignoring all he has learned and slapping into his window every old color that happens to be nearest.

African marigolds and Beacon carnations are the cats and dogs of color, yet three-fourths of self-styled "floral artists" have no conscience about displaying them close together. American Beauty, colored phloxes and Chatenay roses jar each other like a discharge of dynamite; yet every other window you see blinks like a pair of cross eyes with just such attempted combinations.

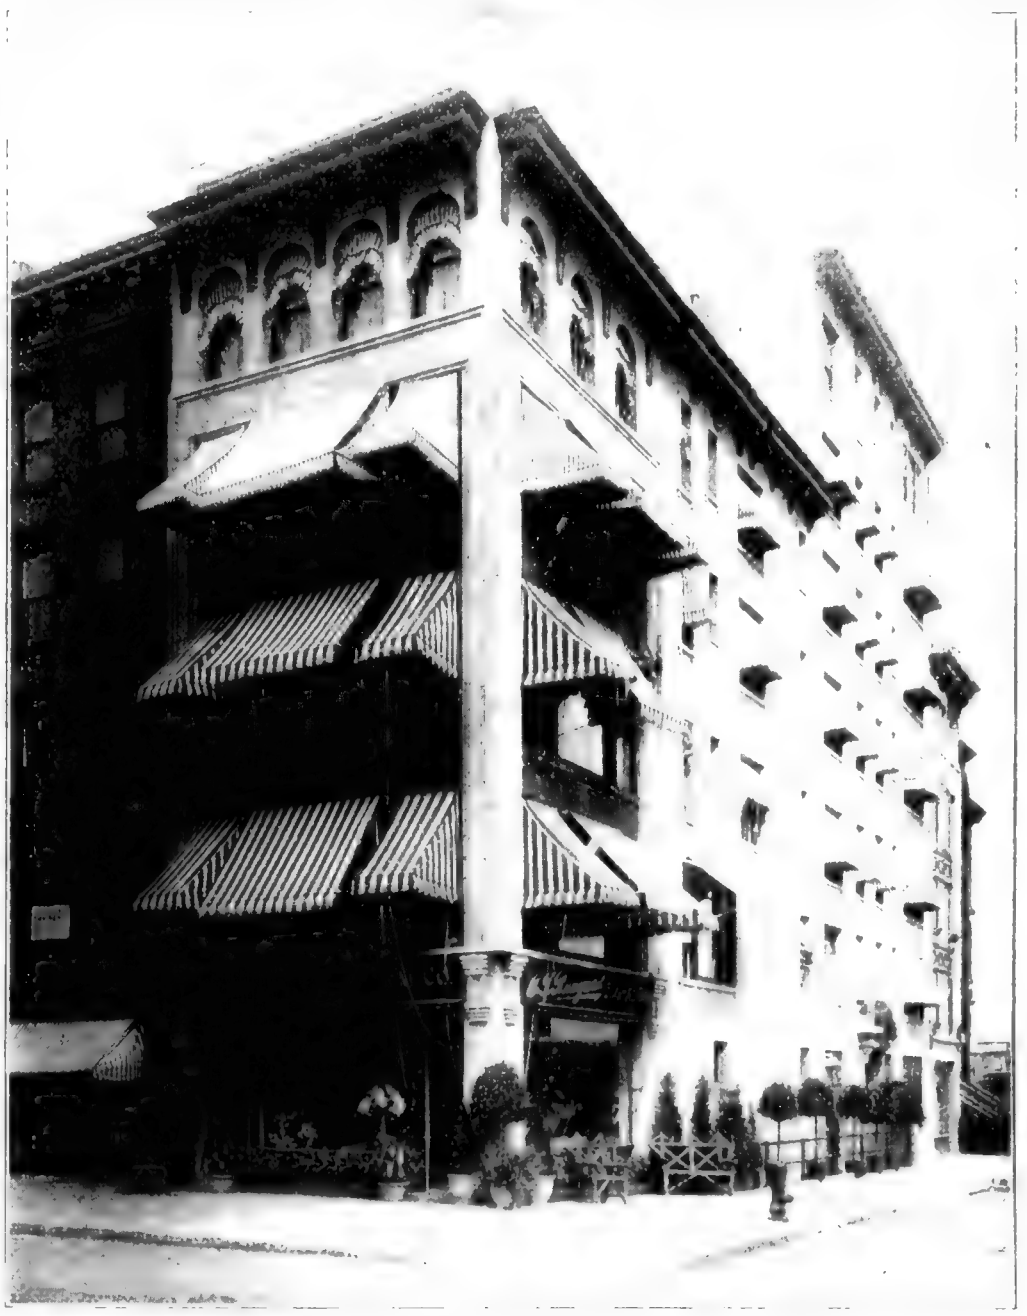
f without color tact, hire somebody e has a little of it. If it is really essary to display flowers of inharmo- colors, separate them in some way, one in front and the other as far y as possible—one prominent and other retiring. Foliage of one kind another is a good neutralizer for s kind of work.

Size and Form of Flowers.

The third topic of this list is, the t of number of kinds and varieties be used together. As with the color stion, it is almost impossible to lay vn definite rules governing the flow- which make harmonious combina- ns, so far as size and form are con- ned. Usually flowers of about one e are best together. An exception to s is the employment of very large and very tiny flowers together, such as lies and violets. Thus equal sizes and extremes of size are permissible, while ose that are nearer alike in size may not be such desirable combinations, un- ss for other reasons.

For other than color reasons, Ameri- n Beauties and daisies make a poor mbination, having no similarity of rm or style of foliage or flower. Roses nd carnations are sometimes called for sprays. While there is no special cord in their union, there is nothing atever to commend it. Lilies with lips or hyacinths are ideal. Phloxes nd hydrangeas are equally good, pro- ded the coloring is harmonious; so, e are gladioli and hydrangeas, snap- agons and hydrangeas, asters and eas, snapdragons and peas, carnations nd peas, daisies and carnations, and, r a delightful combination of extremes size, auratums and peas. Where the xtra large flowers and the extra small es are used, do not mix without a ixed plan for their place in the design. se them for a shower, over the stems, along the edges, for embroidered ef- ts on the wide chiffon loops or ends, for bands or in place of ties.

The Element of Individuality.



The fourth requisite for a good design the element of individuality, that ch distinguishes one person's work m that of another. This consists not some trifling mannerism repeated in ry piece of work produced; it is not et style, but an unnamable speaking of the personality, a giving of one's thought, which, like one's personal ts of speech and demeanor, means rself and nobody else.

wo things combine to produce in- dual work: First, an ability to an- ze and understand the individuality each flower and plant to be dealt h; second, the ability to make them ak your thoughts in the assemblage ch is called the design. "All coons alike to me." "Yes, and all roses one variety look alike to me," says ebody. But all coons did not look e to Uncle Remus; neither need all larneys look alike to the interested dent.

The distribution of color, the set of flower, the turn of the stem, its gth, the angles of the leaves, the un- ling of the petals—these are a few ngs which determine the individu- ty of the flower. They have expres- ns, contenances and profiles.

Which half of this subject has the eater weight in a good design, is left the discrimination of the reader.

The accompanying illustration is re produced from a recent photograph of the building in which is located the store of the A. T. Bunyard Floral Co., New York. Alfred T. WHICH LINE PAYS BEST?

A reader of The Review who for obvious reasons shall remain nameless, but who is located in a town of 20,000 inhabitants and who does a business of from $10,000 to $12,000 per year, sends the following statement and inquiry:

"Owing to the growth of business and lack of room, we find that we shall soon be obliged to give up either our cut flower and design work or the grow ing and sale of bedding plants.

"The present business is divided as follows: Eighty per cent cut flowers and designs, twenty per cent plants, etc. We have eighty per cent of the local cut flower and design business and seventy per cent of the plant trade; have about 12,000 feet of glass and are centrally located; have four competitors, new and old.

"Local trade would not use all the plants we could grow and it would therefore necessitate some wholesaling. On the other hand, we would still be obliged to buy some of our cut flowers.

"The question with us is as to which branch is best to drop. While the cut flower end is the most confining, it is probably the best paying. We would like to get the opinion of some of the trade who have been obliged to take this same step, as to what the outcome has been. Which line is the most desir- able and is our 12,000 feet of glass enough to make the wholesale growing of plants combined with local retail trade as paying a proposition as the cut flower end would be?

"Would you think that the dropping of the plant trade would materially affect our cut flower and design busi- ness?"

The Review is of the opinion that the proper course for this subscriber is to build more glass, even at the expense of a change in location. If readers who have met a similar problem will send in their views they will be pub- lished and, no doubt, read with interest by many besides those whose words are quoted above.

PRESIDENT PHILPOTT'S VIEWS.

[The address of H. E. Philpott, president of the Canadian Horticultural Association, at its thirteenth annual convention, in St. Catherines, Ont., August 10 and 11, 1910.]

As president of the Canadian Horticultural Association, I welcome you to our convention and thirteenth annual session, here in St. Catherines. We sincerely trust that every session may prove interesting enough to have you all present at each.

In the first place, let us get acquainted with each other. The fault of these meetings to a great extent is, that we do not extend to the strangers assembled with us the cordial greeting or friendly hand-clasp that would warrant them in feeling at home, like the rest of us, who are better known to each other. Do not let any of us go home from these meetings without having become acquainted with each other—not only with the members of our association, but with our brothers who have become interested enough to join us during this time. Let us feel that they have not left us total strangers. It would be a good idea to appoint a committee to take charge of this most essential feature—to introduce to each other the members and friends who are gathered with us. It may be that among us are one or more total strangers, who have become interested in our aims and ambitions to progress in horticulture, and have taken this opportunity to meet us as a body in discussing and bettering the interests along this line. They may be induced, simply by the friendly clasp extended to them, to become one of us.

The Society's Aims.

The object of this society is to lift and carry forward everything that tends to advance and perfect our work along all lines and in all branches of our profession, and to impart to all its members such information as may be known to each one, so that all may share in the benefit. So let us present any subject and enter into all discussions in the analyzation of any economic questions of the day.

While we are as yet practically a young organization, much is expected to result from the efforts of this society, and we want to do our best to instruct our members and educate the masses in all lines pertaining to horticulture. We want to widen and deepen the interest in our profession by increasing our membership to such an extent that it will include all the leading men of Canada who are interested in any lines in the calling of horticulture. We want to encourage the formation of kindred societies, encouraging exhibitions of plants and flowers, by bringing the retail dealer into closer relationship with the grower and wholesaler, as, unless the retailers make a success of their business, it is hopeless to expect that the growers or wholesalers can do so.

Making the Meetings Attractive.

What we want to do is to make our meetings so interesting and of such value to the members that they will look forward to each time of meeting. To do this, we must all work together, and those of us who are experienced in the work must be willing to impart their knowledge to the others by discussing the best methods of growing and of treating the various plants and flowers that each is individually interested in; to explain to each other what we have found to be the most profitable methods of erecting and fitting up greenhouses, the best way to heat and ventilate, and all points that will help us to attain the best results and realize the greatest profits. We should be glad to explain the kind of treatment, the foods and nourishment, that we find most beneficial from our experiments along this line; also to describe the means that we have found best in getting rid of the diseases and insects that attack the different plants, and so try to help each other to our uttermost in making the work less arduous and more profitable.

Increasing the Membership.

By the practical experience of our brothers we may be enabled to prevent a waste of time, waste of energy and waste of money that would be more beneficial to us if spent in recreation and amusement. It is only by untiring efforts and by working together along these lines that we can hope to add to our list of members, and show them we are organized to help along the interests of the florists in all lines and branches.

And while we know that our exhibitions and meetings will admit of many improvements from the standpoint of the public, we can but do our best to make them educative and instructive on the lines we are working in, and as nearly right as we know how.

I feel that I can safely state that there is a grand future for us in this country, as the extensive building and improvement of greenhouses, and the nurseries starting up during the past year, convince me that times are prosperous and if we work diligently together we should be able to add greatly to our list of members before we hold our next convention.

A Great Opportunity.

I have also observed what is in my opinion a grand opening in the wholesale trade. Why should we, with opportunities within our reach to grow stock in a wholesale way, depend on so much stock from across the borders, when the avoiding of these conditions would tend to bring us in closer relationship with each other and further advance us in establishing a universal association among the florists and growers of this country? Let each of us try, with all our might, to push the good cause and to bring ourselves on the same footing as older organizations of our kind. Let us take an interest in the younger members of the profession and establish some measure of qualification, so that they may become proficient, and capable of entering into the many places in the horticultural line that at this age present so many opportunities for those who are qualified for such positions. Let us not think of what others are going to do for us; let us endeavor to do more for others than we expect, as individuals, to receive.

There is no reason why a society like ours, by means of which we can meet each year and come in personal contact with each other, for the comparison of ideas and the discussion of everything that pertains to the advancement of our line of business—there is no reason, I say, why our society should not become one great body, that would embrace nearly all in the same calling all through our country.

The principal subject which I wish to present to you, and which will be brought up for discussion, is regarding the duty on plants, flowers, insecticides and supplies. Shall we petition to abolish the duty on plants and flowers coming into Canada, or will it be advisable to have it abolished on plants or supplies or insecticides only? I trust that during the sessions of our meetings our deliberations may be earnest, honest and decisive, and that each one will express his own individual opinions, either by speaking or voting, on any subject that may be presented.

OSHIMA.

Not all the so-called Formosa lilies come from the island of Formosa, but from small islands in the groups north of Formosa, but south of Japan. The accompanying illustration gives some idea of the character of the Oshima islands, which lie in a latitude about that of the southern part of the United States. The plants shown are Formosa lilies. The photograph was sent to Ralph M. Ward & Co. by Mr. Arai, the Japanese bulb grower and exporter.

CHICAGO FLORISTS' SPECIAL.

Chicago to Rochester.

The Chicago Florists' Club has arranged with the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern railroad for transportation to the Rochester convention as follows:

A special train will be provided, same to be counterpart of the Twentieth Century Limited and to consist of combination baggage and buffet car, one of the famous Lake Shore diners, as many 12-section and drawing-room sleeping cars (compartment cars if desired) as may be required to properly take care of the party and give everyone plenty of room, the train to be finished off with either an open section or compartment observation end sleeping car. The train will leave Chicago at 5:30 p. m. Monday, August 15, arriving in Rochester at 9 a. m. Tuesday, August 16.

The rate authorized for this occasion is one and three-fifths fare on the certificate plan, $13.38 going (passengers to be sure and ask for certificates in purchasing their tickets, for on same will depend their being able to secure the reduced rate returning) and three-fifths of that or $8.10 returning, making a total of $21.48 for the round trip. The Pullman rates are as follows: Double lower berth or upper berth, $3; section, $6; compartment, $8.50; drawing room, $11.

Delegates from St. Louis, Indianapolis, Louisville, Cincinnati, Columbus, etc., can join together and arrange for special sleepers to be attached to this special train at Cleveland, thus bringing all together at that point for the remainder of the journey, Cleveland to Rochester. As to the Detroit people, it would be a very easy matter for them to join the special train at Toledo. The St. Louis people could come via Chicago and join this special train if they so desired, as the same rate would apply through Chicago as via the direct line. All florists are invited by the Chicago Florists' Club to travel with the Chicago party.

G. K. Thompson, general agent passenger department, will accompany the party for the purpose of seeing that everything goes smoothly. For further information and reservation, address G. K. Thompson, 180 Clark street, corner Monroe (Telephone, Harrison 7600), or E. F. Winterson, 45 Wabash avenue (Telephone, Central 6004).

INDIANAPOLIS.

Florists' Picnic.

The florists of the city enjoyed an outing at Bertermann's farm, seven miles east of the city, on Thursday, August 4. Two hundred florists, employees and their families went in the afternoon in two special interurban cars for a picnic—the happiest event. the florists say, among all the picnics they have ever held. The committee on arrangements, consisting of Charles Pahud, Will Roepke, Homer Wiegand, Irwin Bertermann, Harry Rieman, A. F. J. Baur and Fred Hukreide, is to be thanked for the good time. A string band furnished music until late in the evening and the picnickers did the rest. The grove was beautifully decorated with American flags and Japanese lanterns. Ernest Rieman was master of ceremonies and the mayor of Cumberland, Herman Junge, presented the prizes.

The married women's race was won by Mrs. Degran; Mrs. A. Reinken, second. Helen Rieman was first in the girls' race; Frieda Rieman, second, and Clara Rhodenbeck, third. In the young ladies' race Louise Rieman was first, and Esther Strickland, second. In the free for all race for men, John Boylan was first, and Robert Fohl, second. Norman Hukreide won first, and Carl Elsner, second, in the boys' race.

There were also bowling contests and a game of baseball, in which the South Sides beat the North Sides 11 to 1. John Hartje was umpire.

A picnic dinner, at 5 p. m., was served on tables profusely decorated with flowers, and at 7 p. m. all returned to their homes.

Various Notes.

Will Roepke and wife are spending a few days at Lake Manitou.

C. R. Greene, of A. Wiegand & Sons, is back to work, after a two weeks' stay in a camp on Eagle creek. Mr. Greene says he spent most of the time trying to catch bait to fish with.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Rieman have left for an extended trip through Yellowstone Park and the northwest. They expect to be gone about three weeks.

George Wiegand leaves this week on an auto trip, to occupy about ten days. He expects to go from here to Columbus, O., then to Cleveland, then across the lake to Canada, up to Toronto and back through Detroit.

A number of the florists leave here next Monday night for the convention, among them being Adolph Baur, Fred Dorner, Irwin Bertermann and John Grande. H. L. W.

CARNATIONS

UP-TO-DATE CULTURE.

[A paper by H. L. Janzen, Berlin, Ont., read this week before the Canadian Horticultural Association.]

At this season of the year carnation growers are making preparations to house the field-grown plants. We will take for granted that the new soil to fill the benches is already on the premises and in good condition, ready to wheel in. After the old soil has been removed from the benches, see that the houses have a thorough cleaning, especially under raised benches, for if these are used rubbish will accumulate despite all efforts to the contrary. Use the hose to wash out all the loose soil from between the cracks of the wood benches and from between the tiles, where brick and tile benches are used. Give the wood benches a good coat of hot whitewash on the sides and bottom, well rubbed in. On the brick and tile benches, and also on the solid brick beds, give the face brick a good coat of whitewash on the inner side and sprinkle a light coat of air-slaked lime over the bottom of the beds before refilling. Fill the benches level full and firm down well along the edges. Before beginning to plant, mark the beds both ways. For shading we use a light mud wash sprayed on the outside of the glass. This stays on long enough and is easily removed, if necessary, before rain comes to wash it off.

Benching Young Stock.

When ready to lift the plants from the field, choose a dull, quiet day, if at all possible, as the plants then suffer least from exposure. Select only the best and most shapely plants for benching, as a poor plant takes too long to round into shape for the winter season. In digging we use a four-tined fork and find this tool to be the best for that porpose, as the plants lift with a nice ball of earth attached if the ground is not too dry. Have plenty of flats handy to place the plants in as fast as dug and when a load of plants is ready send it along to the planters. Do not rub off too much of the soil that clings to the roots, as the plant with all, or nearly all, of the soil removed takes a great deal longer to become established in its new quarters than one lifted with a nice ball of earth attached.

When planting, do not plant too deeply, and leave a small depression around each plant. Give each plant a good watering as soon as planted and keep plenty of moisture in the house by spraying until the plants have taken hold, when the spraying can be reduced.

After the plants have started to grow nicely the surface of the beds should be leveled down and all diseased and dry foliage removed. Keep up the stirring of the soil as often as needed, as it kills the small weeds and helps to keep the soil sweet. Give all the ventilation possible day and night, but avoid draughts, and watch the watering of the soil. Rather give a good, heavy watering when necessary than constant light sprayings.

Supports and Ventilation.

Whatever style of support you use, get it in place as soon as the plants are well established, as the new growth must be kept upright if you want straight stems later on. From this on it is a matter of daily attention to watering, ventilating and the innumerable little details that make for success in carnation culture. When the nights become cool enough to require fire heat, do not shut down the ventilators tight and try to make the heat in the house carry through until morning, but rather put on a line of pipe or two and leave a good, generous crack of air on, as you cannot get too much fresh air in the carnation house.

Propagating.

About the first part of December we take our first batch of cuttings. Give the propagating bench a good coat of hot whitewash and fill it level full of clean, sharp sand, which should be well watered and pounded down before putting in the cuttings. In pulling the cuttings select only the strongest from flowering stems. When putting the cuttings in the sand do not put them down more than three-quarters of an inch, with rows about an inch and a half apart, and the cuttings not too close in the rows. Water them in well and keep well shaded and sprayed for about two weeks, after which time they will not require so much water.

As soon as the cuttings are rooted we plant them out on benches, the same as the parent stock, but a great deal closer, about four inches apart each way for the earlier propagation, and shade them slightly if the weather is sunny, avoiding draughts and giving them a good watering as soon as planted. The young stock, once established, should not have a high temperature, but rather one several degrees lower than the blooming plants receive.

In topping the young stock we pull the tops out clean when the plants have grown enough to show the joints between the foliage. Go over the stock as often as is necessary, at least once a week. Keep the young plants free from weeds and the soil stirred occasionally.

Field Culture.

When the weather becomes settled in the spring, and all danger of frost is over, plant the young stock out into the field. This should be plowed and manured during the fall and again plowed early in the spring. When ready to plant out plow up and harrow well as much ground as you require for one day's planting, as this prevents the entire field from drying out before planting begins. There are different methods of planting in the field, but the method which enables you to get your stock planted out in the least time is the one to use. After the stock is all planted out, keep the wheel hoe going to keep the weeds from getting ahead of you and also to supply moisture to the plants. In dry weather such as we have had this summer it is of decided advantage to the plants.

When pinching back the plants in the field, go over them quite often and pinch back the longest growths, but not more than one or two at a time. If the topping is carefully done you will not be troubled by your plants cropping before warm weather comes in the spring.

Under Glass All Summer.

To those of you who have not tried indoor cultivation of carnations, try a bench or two next spring and see the advantage of this method, especially as regards Enchantress and its sports. Of course, this method of cultivation entails a great deal more labor and closer attention during the rush of spring and early summer work, but the results we think more than repay the extra labor. About the first part of May we bench our earliest propagated stock, taking only the best and strongest plants. These lift with a good ball of soil attached if the bench has been well soaked before digging. We do not use any shading on these except that which has been sprayed on the glass to hold the color of the bloom on the old plants. These plants are handled exactly like those lifted from the field and when they are well established we stir the soil on the beds at least once a week. This is absolutely necessary, as otherwise a green scum would soon form from the constant spraying and watering that is required to keep down the temperature during June and July.

Before putting up the supports we rub in a good, generous sprinkling of bone meal, as it is much easier applied at this time. Cultural methods from now on are the same as for the field-grown stock. A careful record of the blooms cut from both field and indoor cultivation will show a decided gain for the indoor stock.

BEST SINGLE VIOLET.

What is the most profitable single violet to grow? What are the characteristics of the Gov. Herrick violet? I know nothing of it. W. D. H.

Princess of Wales stands head and shoulders above all other single violets. Governor Herrick has a fine color, but lacks odor, is short-stemmed and is not a satisfactory winter bloomer. Most of those who have tried it have discarded it. W. C.

VIOLETS IN MUM HOUSE.

Kindly inform us if we can grow violets in a chrysanthemum house, and if it is too late to plant them. W. W. F. C.

Violets will do well in a chrysanthemum house, provided the temperature is kept to suit them. A night reading as near 40 degrees as possible should be maintained in winter. The doubles will stand 2 or 3 degrees more heat than the singles, but all do better kept as near 40 degrees as possible. Double violets should be housed in August; certainly not later than the middle of September, or they are liable to spot badly. On the other hand, single violets must not be housed until October, or in some states the early part of November. They require some freezing before planting them indoors, to check the leaf growth. Early planting means a heavy crop of foliage and few flowers. Some successful growers follow early mums with violets. It is easy to scatter a little hay over the plants if the thermometer seems likely to go too low. A temperature of 24 to 26 degrees will suffice to check the leaf growth. C. W.

POT CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

Some growers still plant out their bush chrysanthemums, lifting them in September. It is possible to secure fairly good plants in this way, but the foliage is poor compared with that of pot-grown plants and many shoots come blind, owing to the attacks of the chinch bugs. It means more work to grow in pots all the time, but it will pay in the end. All plants should now be in their flowering pots, and the best place for them is the side benches of a light, sunny house, where they can have abundant ventilation.

Pinching should be discontinued now on all the weak and moderate growing varieties. The robust sorts can be stopped until August 20, after which no more work of this kind must be done. If pinching has been carefully done, the plants will be so bushy that no staking will yet be necessary, and in many plants none will be needed at any time, especially with singles, such as Mizpah and Zeroff, which have a neat, bushy habit that we would like to see in many others of the singles. Black fly is about the only pest to be feared just now, but spraying with nicotine or any other good insecticide will soon clean it out. In hot weather the plants enjoy being sprayed over several times a day. It helps to cool the house and refreshes the plants greatly. Where the pots are well filled with roots, feeding may commence, but I do not favor using stimulants much until the buds show. Weak doses of cow-manure water, to which is added some soot, will make a good food, which will keep the foliage a rich, dark green color.

Florists' Picnic.

The florists of the city enjoyed an outing at Bertermann's farm, seven miles east of the city, on Thursday, August 4. Two hundred florists, employees and their families went in the afternoon in two special interurban cars for a picnic—the happiest event, the florists say, among all the picnics they have ever held. The committee on arrangements, consisting of Charles Pahud, Will Roepke, Homer Wiegand, Irwin Bertermann, Harry Rieman, A. F. J. Baur and Fred Hukreide, is to be thanked for the good time. A string band furnished music until late in the evening and the picnickers did the rest. The grove was beautifully decorated with American flags and Japanese lanterns. Ernest Rieman was master of ceremonies and the mayor of Cumberland, Herman Junge, presented the prizes.

The married women's race was won by Mrs. Degran; Mrs. A. Reinken, second. Helen Rieman was first in the girls' race; Frieda Rieman, second, and Clara Rhodenbeck, third. In the young ladies' race Louise Rieman was first, and Esther Strickland, second. In the free for all race for men, John Boylan was first, and Robert Fohl, second. Norman Hukreide won first, and Carl Elsner, second, in the boys' race.

There were also bowling contests and a game of baseball, in which the South Sides beat the North Sides 11 to 1. John Hartje was umpire.

A picnic dinner, at 5 p. m., was served on tables profusely decorated with flowers, and at 7 p. m. all returned to their homes.

Various Notes.

Will Roepke and wife are spending a few days at Lake Manitou.

C. R. Greene, of A. Wiegand & Sons, is back to work, after a two weeks' stay in a camp on Eagle creek. Mr. Greene says he spent most of the time trying to catch bait to fish with.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Rieman have left for an extended trip through Yellowstone Park and the northwest. They expect to be gone about three weeks.

George Wiegand leaves this week on an auto trip, to occupy about ten days. He expects to go from here to Columbus, O., then to Cleveland, then across the lake to Canada, up to Toronto and back through Detroit.

A number of the florists leave here next Monday night for the convention, among them being Adolph Baur, Fred Dorner, Irwin Bertermann and John Grande. H. L. W.

CARNATIONS

UP-TO-DATE CULTURE.

[A paper by H. L. Janzen, Berlin, Ont., read this week before the Canadian Horticultural Association.]

At this season of the year carnation growers are making preparations to house the field-grown plants. We will take for granted that the new soil to fill the benches is already on the premises and in good condition, ready to wheel in. After the old soil has been removed from the benches, see that the houses have a thorough cleaning, especially under raised benches, for if these are used rubbish will accumulate despite all efforts to the contrary. Use the hose to wash out all the loose soil from between the cracks of the wood benches and from between the tiles, where brick and tile benches are used. Give the wood benches a good coat of hot whitewash on the sides and bottom, well rubbed in. On the brick and tile benches, and also on the solid brick beds, give the face brick a good coat of whitewash on the inner side and sprinkle a light coat of air-slaked lime over the bottom of the beds before refilling. Fill the benches level full and firm down well along the edges. Before beginning to plant, mark the beds both ways. For shading we use a light mud wash sprayed on the outside of the glass. This stays on long enough and is easily removed, if necessary, before rain comes to wash it off.

Benching Young Stock.

When ready to lift the plants from the field, choose a dull, quiet day, if at all possible, as the plants then suffer least from exposure. Select only the best and most shapely plants for benching, as a poor plant takes too long to round into shape for the winter season. In digging we use a four-tined fork and find this tool to be the best for that porpose, as the plants lift with a nice ball of earth attached if the ground is not too dry. Have plenty of flats handy to place the plants in as fast as dug and when a load of plants is ready send it along to the planters. Do not rub off too much of the soil that clings to the roots, as the plant with all, or nearly all, of the soil removed takes a great deal longer to become established in its new quarters than one lifted with a nice ball of earth attached.

When planting, do not plant too deeply, and leave a small depression around each plant. Give each plant a good watering as soon as planted and keep plenty of moisture in the house by spraying until the plants have taken hold, when the spraying can be reduced.

After the plants have started to grow nicely the surface of the beds should be leveled down and all diseased and dry foliage removed. Keep up the stirring of the soil as often as needed, as it kills the small weeds and helps to keep the soil sweet. Give all the ventilation possible day and night, but avoid draughts, and watch the watering of the soil. Rather give a good, heavy watering when necessary than constant light sprayings.

Supports and Ventilation.

Whatever style of support you use, get it in place as soon as the plants are well established, as the new growth must be kept upright if you want straight stems later on. From this on it is a matter of daily attention to watering, ventilating and the innumerable little details that make for success in carnation culture. When the nights become cool enough to require fire heat, do not shut down the ventilators tight and try to make the heat in the house carry through until morning, but rather put on a line of pipe or two and leave a good, generous crack of air on, as you cannot get too much fresh air in the carnation house.

Propagating.

About the first part of December we take our first batch of cuttings. Give the propagating bench a good coat of hot whitewash and fill it level full of clean, sharp sand, which should be well watered and pounded down before putting in the cuttings. In pulling the cuttings select only the strongest from flowering stems. When putting the cuttings in the sand do not put them down more than three-quarters of an inch, with rows about an inch and a half apart, and the cuttings not too close in the rows. Water them in well and keep well shaded and sprayed for about two weeks, after which time they will not require so much water.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Poinsettias.

The last batch of poinsettia cuttings should now be taken. Of course they can be rooted even a month later, but the resultant plants will be too puny to be of much value. The earliest and strongest plants are now in benches containing five inches of loam and have just been staked up. From these, bracts eighteen to twenty inches across will be cut, unless something unforeseen occurs. Poinsettias will grow outdoors in a frame or in any ordinary greenhouse in summer, but they should not be planted out in any house where it is not possible to maintain a minimum temperature of 60 to 62 degrees while the bracts are developing. A lower temperature means a loss of foliage and a reduced size in the bracts.

It is a little early yet to make up pans of poinsettias, as they will become too tall before they bloom. The earlier plants would better be either benched or flowered singly in 6-inch pots. Nice stock in 6-inch pots, well foliaged, is always salable, even if it is a foot taller than what is in pans. Be sure to keep cuttings potted off while the roots are small. They are easily broken and seriously injured if left even a few days too long in the propagating bench. Keep close until established in the pots, then more cool and airy, in order to keep them stocky.

Show Pelargoniums.

The wood on show pelargoniums, after a few weeks' rest lying on their sides, should now be pretty well ripened and of a nutty brown color. Take a sharp knife and prune back the shoots quite severely, leaving not even a couple of eyes on each. If you need more stock of any special variety and have omitted putting in cuttings, you can still do so. The shoots, even if quite firm, will root readily in a cool house. After heading back the plants, give them a little water and spray twice or thrice a day. As soon as they show signs of breaking nicely is the time to shake the soil entirely away from them. Cut back the long roots and place the plants in as small pots as they can conveniently be squeezed into. A plant in a 6-inch pot should go in a 4-inch, and those in 7-inch and 8-inch in 5-inch pots. Water sparingly, not only before potting, but afterward. It is easy to cause the plants to rot off in warm weather with a little too much moisture. Spray freely, but water little until roots and shoots are growing actively.

Crotons.

During the dog days all tropical plants reach their maximum rate of growth. Crotons are lovers of heat and moisture and now are making rapid headway. The foliage will soon get dirty and insect pests will multiply, unless a force of water, well directed from a careful hand, is used. There is really no need of blackened, slimy leaves, such as we too often see, if the water pressure through a fine-spray nozzle is properly directed. Neither should it be possible for such pests as mealy bug or red spider to take up quarters on any of the plants. Crotons, when well rooted, enjoy weak doses of liquid manure, and we have found Clay's fertilizer scattered on the surface an excellent food, applied at intervals of ten days.

Young plants, to keep them growing along in good shape, must have a brisk, moist heat. A first-class place for them is in a coldframe of sufficient depth, where the pots can be plunged in ashes, leaves or tan bark. Shade given should be just enough to prevent the leaves from scalding. A heavy coat will spoil the coloring of the leaves. Syringe them over and close up about the middle of the afternoon. If a brisk heat is bottled up each day the rate of growth is surprising, not only with crotons, but many other fine foliaged plants.

Lilium Harrisii.

The earliest batch of Harrisii lilies have just been potted in 5-inch pots. We are told that the percentage of diseased bulbs will this season be less than usual. It is a consummation devoutly to be wished, for of late years there has been little profit in growing them, owing to the large number of diseased bulbs. Either a coldframe—where the pots, after watering, can be covered with a light coating of dry moss or excelsior, afterwards placing board shutters over them—or the floor of a cellar, is a suitable place to stand the pots. They should not be exposed to the sun and, if given a suitable place, ought not to require any water until growth is nicely started. Too much water in the early stages of growth is productive of much of the so-called disease.

North Judson, Ind.—C. C. Arnold has a fine field of gladioli, mostly America, with a few Princeps, but a great deal of watering has been necessary on account of the prolonged drought. Early asters, he says, are poor.

Geraniums

SCENTED GERANIUMS.

Retail florists are finding considerable call for scented geraniums each year, not only for selling as plants, but the shoots are popular, and rightly so, for arranging in bowls. The individual leaves also find considerable favor for using in finger-bowls for dinners. One well-known grower, who makes something of a specialty of scented-leaved geraniums, saves a number of plants over from his spring sales and plants several of them in boxes six inches deep, growing them outside until cold weather necessitates their removal under glass. Treated thus, fine shoots are procurable for winter use. Of course from plants outdoors whole armfuls of shoots can be had at this season, but the demand for these is light now as compared with winter.

If no stock has been carried over, it is a good plan to take a good batch of cuttings now. Either place them in a north house in the sand bench, or in flats of sand in a coldframe. They will root in about three weeks, when they can be potted off; by potting along, fine, bushy stock can be had before Christmas. Cuttings taken with a heel and inclined to be hard are less liable to damp off at this season than the thick, sappy ones.

GERANIUM FOLIAGE EATEN.

My geranium leaves are dying, first at the base of the plant, then on up the stalk. There seem to be little transparent places eaten on the leaves, while the tissue of the leaf is left. I am unable to find any insects on the plants. The trouble is not confined to any one variety. The plants on the east side of the house are not affected. Those that are troubled in this way are on the north side of the greenhouses and the others are in the full sun. I send you a leaf that has just been blighted. The leaves stay green at first, but soon turn brown. Can you tell me where the trouble lies?

R. F.

The leaves show unmistakable signs of having been chewed by some pest, probably a small caterpillar. One of a hairy nature is not infrequently to be found at work among them in late summer. You cannot spray your plants with Paris green without burning the foliage. Arsenate of lead will not harm them, but will whiten the foliage. White hellebore, dusted on while the leaves are damp, is safe and reliable. You can also spray it on at the rate of two ounces to a 3-gallon can. Geraniums grown in shade or partial shade are always softer than those in the full sun, and fall an easier prey to insect attacks. Do not use any of the oil solutions or kerosene emulsion on the geraniums, or you are likely to burn much of the foliage. Nicotine extracts are safe, but the hellebore should take care of the pests attacking your plants.

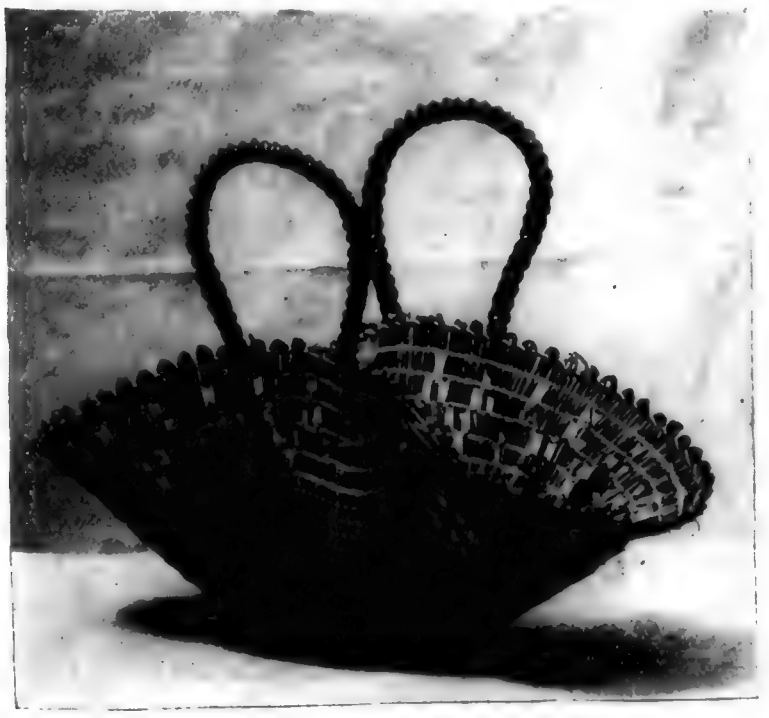
Two of the Season's Novelties in Supplies for the Retailer.

NOVEL SUPPLIES.

There is a resemblance, more or less striking, according to the point of view, between the successful collector of florists' supplies and the successful newspaper man. Each must study and educate the public taste. Each must know what to take and what to leave. Each must explore and have confidence in his friends and in himself. The successful collector of florists' supplies collects with a definite object in view, searching, adapting, designing until that which is required is produced. It may come from a jeweler's, from a shoemaker's, or it may be made to order in the factory. Plainly stated, the problem is how to add to beauty of flower and plant so as to make them necessary, to overcome all barriers to their use. Of course, there are some supplies that have nothing to do with flowers or plants, but these are unimportant. The solution of the problem is expressed in one word—taste. That which is chosen in defiance of taste may grow like a weed for a time, but it will soon be cast aside and forgotten. Taste, combined with originality, is essential to success in florists' supplies.



M. Rice talked delightfully of his aims in novelties, of his trip abroad and of his work with our floral artists, suggesting many of the thoughts expressed while describing the novelties he has gathered for the coming season. The butterflies were intended to give a natural touch to a hand bouquet, for instance—the large glass butterfly on a prominent flower or leaf, its springs giving a motion quite lifelike. The smaller butterflies of satin, scattered about dainty paper bouquet holders in flower colors, are skilfully designed to adorn pretty clusters of every kind of flower. Violet shields, in purple for the singles and lavender for the doubles, add grace while protecting delicate fabrics.

A novel touch that Mr. Rice has prepared for fashion's fancy is the lace-like paper handkerchief. The idea is that one of these dainty white or lavender or Nile green creations be laid in each box of choice blossoms, so that the fair recipient of the gift may brush the moisture from her dainty fingers when they are arranged in bowls or vases. The corsage pins brought a look of pride to Mr. Rice's face—large glass pins of purple, handsomely mounted, seen in the Parisian jewelers' shops; modified to meet the florists' needs, yet still the most astounding pins ever offered for corsage bouquets.

Silver will be the fashionable color next season, so silver wire ribbon has now appeared in divers widths. There are bridal scarfs, exquisite in design, of fair chiffon. Soft chenille ribbon, with tassels many colored, is a pretty novelty. The ribbon shelves are now graced by a real Killarney ribbon, white, cerise-shot, giving that lovely contrast in pinks betwixt inner and outer side of petal for which Killarney is so dearly loved. This perfect match represents long striving before the result was attained. A practical ribbon, designed to meet the needs of a pretty and serviceable bow, that will fill its place without shrinking from moisture, has already won friends.

A frost-proof, water-proof parchment paper in flower colors, for wrapping, gives tone where used. Already it is being largely used, though brand-new.

There are two novelties in pot covers, though in different classes. One is moss-

Young plants, to keep them growing along in good shape, must have a brisk, moist heat. A first-class place for them is in a coldframe of sufficient depth, where the pots can be plunged in ashes, leaves or tan bark. Shade given should be just enough to prevent the leaves from scalding. A heavy coat will spoil the coloring of the leaves. Syringe them over and close up about the middle of the afternoon. If a brisk heat is bottled up each day the rate of growth is surprising, not only with crotons, but many other fine foliaged plants.

Lilium Harrisii.

The earliest batch of Harrisii lilies have just been potted in 5-inch pots. We are told that the percentage of diseased bulbs will this season be less than usual. It is a consummation devoutly to be wished, for of late years there has been little profit in growing them, owing to the large number of diseased bulbs. Either a coldframe where the pots, after watering, can be covered with a light coating of dry moss or excelsior, afterwards placing board shutters over them—or the floor of a cellar, is a suitable place to stand the pots. They should not be exposed to the sun and, if given a suitable place, ought not to require any water until growth is nicely started. Too much water in the early stages of growth is productive of much of the so-called disease.

North Judson, Ind.—C. C. Arnold has a fine field of gladioli, mostly America, with a few Princeps, but a great deal of watering has been necessary on account of the prolonged drought. Early asters, he says, are poor.

Geraniums

SCENTED GERANIUMS.

Retail florists are finding considerable call for scented geraniums each year, not only for selling as plants, but the shoots are popular, and rightly so, for arranging in bowls. The individual leaves also find considerable favor for using in finger-bowls for dinners. One well-known grower, who makes something of a specialty of scented leaved geraniums, saves a number of plants over from his spring sales and plants several of them in boxes six inches deep, growing them outside until cold weather necessitates their removal under glass. Treated thus, fine shoots are procurable for winter use. Of course from plants outdoors whole armfuls of shoots can be had at this season, but the demand for these is light now as compared with winter.

If no stock has been carried over, it is a good plan to take a good batch of cuttings now. Either place them in a north house in the sand bench, or in flats of sand in a coldframe. They will root in about three weeks, when they can be potted off; by potting along, fine, bushy stock can be had before Christmas. Cuttings taken with a heel and inclined to be hard are less liable to damp off at this season than the thick, sappy ones.

GERANIUM FOLIAGE EATEN.

My geranium leaves are dying, first at the base of the plant, then on up the stalk. There seem to be little transparent places eaten on the leaves, while the tissue of the leaf is left. I am unable to find any insects on the plants. The trouble is not confined to any one variety. The plants on the east side of the house are not affected. Those that are troubled in this way are on the north side of the greenhouses and the others are in the full sun. I send you a leaf that has just been blighted. The leaves start green at first, but soon turn brown. Can you tell me where the trouble lies?

R. F.

The leaves show unmistakable signs of having been chewed by some pest, probably a small caterpillar. One of hairy nature is not infrequently to be found at work among them in late summer. You cannot spray your plants with Paris green without burning the foliage. Arsenate of lead will not harm them, but will whiten the foliage. White hellebore, dusted on while the leaves are damp, is safe and reliable. You can also spray it on at the rate of two ounces to a 3-gallon can. Geraniums grown in shade or partial shade are always softer than those in the full sun, and fall an easier prey to insect attacks. Do not use any of the oil solutions or kerosene emulsion on the geraniums, or you are likely to burn much of the foliage. Nicotine extracts are safe, but the hellebore should take care of the pests attacking your plants.

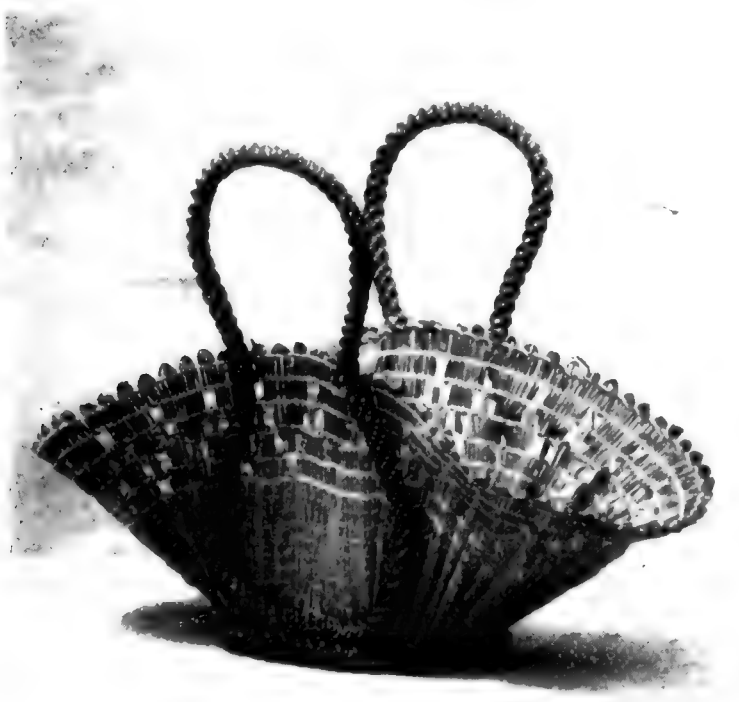
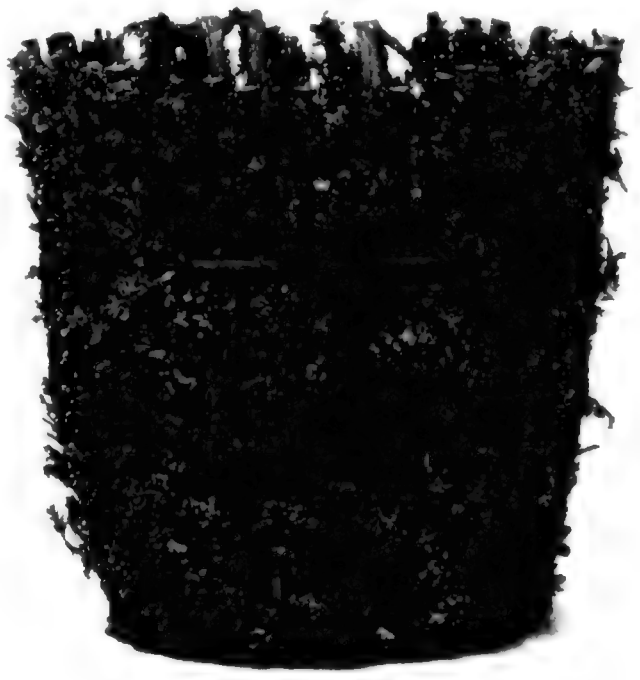
NOVEL SUPPLIES.

There is a resemblance, more or less striking, according to the point of view, between the successful collector of florists' supplies and the successful newspaper man. Each must study and educate the public taste. Each must know what to take and what to leave. Each must explore and have confidence in his friends and in himself. The successful collector of florists' supplies collects with a definite object in view, searching, adapting, designing until that which is required is produced. It may come from a jeweler's, from a shoemaker's, or it may be made to order in the factory. Plainly stated, the problem is how to add to beauty of flower and plant so as to make them necessary, to overcome all barriers to their use. Of course, there are some supplies that have nothing to do with flowers or plants, but these are unimportant. The solution of the problem is expressed in one word—taste. That which is chosen in defiance of taste may grow like a weed for a time, but it will soon be cast aside and forgotten. Taste, combined with originality, is essential to success in florists' supplies.



M. Rice talked delightfully of his aims in novelties, of his trip abroad and of his work with our floral artists, suggesting many of the thoughts expressed while describing the novelties he has gathered for the coming season. The butterflies were intended to give a natural touch to a hand bouquet, for instance—the large glass butterfly on a prominent flower or leaf, its springs giving a motion quite lifelike. The smaller butterflies of satin, scattered about dainty paper bouquet holders in flower colors, are skilfully designed to adorn pretty clusters of every kind of flower. Violet shields, in purple for the singles and lavender for the doubles, add grace while protecting delicate fabrics.

A novel touch that Mr. Rice has prepared for fashion's fancy is the lace like paper handkerchief. The idea is that one of these dainty white or lavender or Nile green creations be laid in each box of choice blossoms, so that the fair recipient of the gift may brush the moisture from her dainty fingers when they are arranged in bowls or vases. The corsage pins brought a look of pride to Mr. Rice's face—large glass pins of purple, handsomely mounted, seen in the Parisian jewelers' shops; modified to meet the florists' needs, yet still the most astounding pins ever offered for corsage bouquets.



Silver will be the fashionable color next season, so silver wire ribbon has now appeared in divers widths. There are bridal scarfs, exquisite in design, of fair chiffon. Soft chenille ribbon, with tassels many colored, is a pretty novelty. The ribbon shelves are now graced by a real Killarney ribbon, white, cerise-shot, giving that lovely contrast in pinks betwixt inner and outer side of petal for which Killarney is so dearly loved. This perfect match represents long striving before the result was attained. A practical ribbon, designed to meet the needs of a pretty and serviceable bow, that will fill its place without shrinking from moisture, has already won friends.

A frost proof, water-proof parchment paper in flower colors, for wrapping, gives tone where used. Already it is being largely used, though brand-new.

There are two novelties in pot covers, though in different classes. One is moss-covered—a beauty—the real thing. The other is two-colored, adjustable, a charming combination of green and soft pink.

In baskets, birch twig rules the day. There are Roman bowls, high backs, gypsy kettles, and improved gathering baskets of most pleasing design, with high, irregular handles. In front of these, their dainty forms in striking contrast to the rugged, dark birches, are the Italian novelty baskets of delicate straw, for favors, looking as though the very sight of them would suggest daisies and peas to come. Nearby are green raffia baskets, beautifully woven, and on a shelf across the aisle are wooden Swiss toys, water buckets and the like, for favors. Last, but by no means least, are improved wall pockets designed at Edward Habermehl's suggestion, after much planning—a good thing, surely.

P. S.—Many letters have postscripts. This is the postscript to my letter: A Panama hat in miniature is designed for favors and for shields—a quaint conception, usable and pretty. After many attempts, pliable cycas leaves have come. They are true to nature and bendable into graceful curves never attempted by cycas until now. The revival in prepared fern fronds brings great variety—known and almost unknown—many in colors. though natural green predominates. Phil.

CARRYING OVER ROSE PLANTS.

I have a house of roses which were planted last year, and which have done well. Now I wish to dry them up and give them a rest for winter blooming. Please tell me how to treat them and how and when to prune them. Will raw bone and cow manure be sufficient as fertilizers? How many years will they be profitable? The varieties are Bride, Maid, Golden Gate, Killarney and a few Richmond. I am located in Kentucky. G. O. K.

The querist does not say whether his roses are on table or on solid benches. I presume they are on table benches, with the usual depth, five inches, of soil.

In order to ripen them, begin at once to gradually diminish the supply of water and continue this for at least three weeks. If the weather is bright, however, great care must be taken never to let them become so dry that even the softest of the wood will wilt. During this process, syringing must be resorted to frequently to keep spider in check, and plenty of ventilation must be given both night and day.

Prune out all the small, strawy wood. Cut back the strong shoots to three eyes, bend them down to almost right angles and tie them there. This will encourage the dormant eyes near the base to break. It is also well to remove as much of the top soil as can be taken without disturbing the roots. Then give the surface a sprinkling of air-slaked lime and fill up the bench with a compost consisting of two parts decomposed cow manure and one part turfy loam.

Give the bench a thorough soaking and keep the house cool and moist for a week, using the syringe freely during bright weather.

Raw bone flour is an excellent fertilizer. This can be sprinkled over the surface of the soil and stirred in from time to time, but it must never be used in combination with lime. Cow manure can be used as a mulch, of which a thickness of one inch is sufficient at any time. Or the manure can be used in the liquid form; in this form it is easily assimilated and therefore quicker in action.

By carefully treating these varieties in this way, they can be grown profitably for years. I recently visited a place in Pennsylvania where some of the plants were 9 years old, and they were bearing profusely. They were on solid benches. Ribes.

BIENNIALS AND PERENNIALS.

A dry summer is not the best for transplanting young seedlings to the open ground. If biennials, such as digitalis, Canterbury bells, etc., are still in the seed beds, advantage should be taken of the first spell of cool, moist weather to get them out. Allow the plants nine inches in the rows. If the rows are twenty-four inches apart they can be conveniently stirred with a hand cultivator. Perennials, such as aquilegias, Chinese larkspurs and others of more moderate growth, can go much closer in the rows. August and September are the months par excellence for these plants to make their growth, and if given a piece of land well loosened up by the harrow they will grow fast.

BOTTOM HEAT FOR PALM SEED.

Would it be injurious to kentia seeds to give them a bottom heat of between 90 and 100 degrees? E. N.

Kentia seeds will endure a bottom heat of 90 degrees without special injury, though so high a temperature is not really needed to ensure their germination and such a temperature is likely to make the seedlings rather long and spindly. In addition to this, the seedlings are liable to feel the check more at the time they are potted off than would be the case when grown at a somewhat lower temperature.

A bottom heat of 80 degrees is sufficiently high, and they are frequently germinated at a lower average temperature than that. W. H. T.

HYDRANGEAS.

Where hydrangeas are growing in the field they may be suffering from dryness at the root, in which case, if they are beyond the reach of the hose, they should be watered. Draw a ring around each plant, or a channel along each row, and fill it with water. With a barrel and watering pot the work will not occupy long. Push back the dry soil and keep the ground well stirred. This is vastly more beneficial to the plants than playing the surface soil and baking it hard, little moisture reaching the roots. Plants being grown on in pots will take up a lot of water in hot, dry weather, and several sprayings overhead daily should be given to keep them from wilting. Late rooted stock in 3-inch pots will take a shift to 5-inch pots, and fill these with roots before fall. Use a moderately heavy and rich loam, as hydrangeas are strong feeders.

OBITUARY.

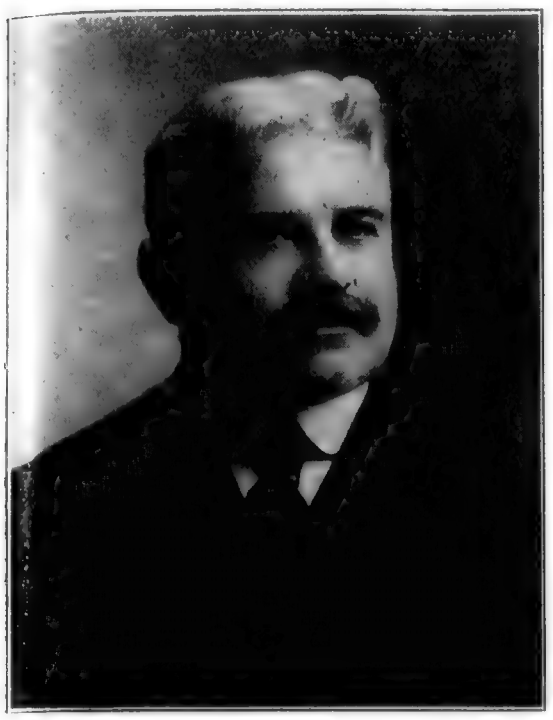
L. R. Fuller.

Luther R. Fuller, of Shelburne Falls, Mass., died August 1 at his home on Green street, where he had been engaged in the florists' trade for twelve years. He was 66 years of age and had been in poor health for two years or more. He was a past grand of the Alethian lodge of Odd Fellows. Forty-one years ago he married Miss Mary Chapin, of Ashfield. He is survived by his wife, a daughter, Mrs. Ethel Johnson, who lives at home, and two sons, Edward W. Fuller, of San Francisco, Cal., and Julian Fuller, of Ashland, N. H.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

There is surely a sufficiency of stock in the market. That which really is good sells readily, while the buyers hesitate as they view the other grades. The prices, as is usual when there are gluts, are in inverse ratio to the supply.



Roses sell quickly. The Beauties, My Maryland, Taft and Kaiserin are of excellent quality. There still are some light receipts of carnations, but the blooms are small. Gladioli and hydrangeas are accumulating, the former because of the many large consignments and the latter because the demand has shifted to white asters. Easter lilies, auratums, speciosums and nymphæas are offered. A few cattleyas are arriving.

Asters are everywhere, with few sales to take them up. The really good stock is cleaned up at fair prices, while the ordinary grades do not move at all.

The green goods market is quiet.

On to Rochester.

Most of the Cincinnatians bound conventionward expect to leave Cincinnati on the C., H. & D. for Detroit, then take the boat to Buffalo, and then rail to

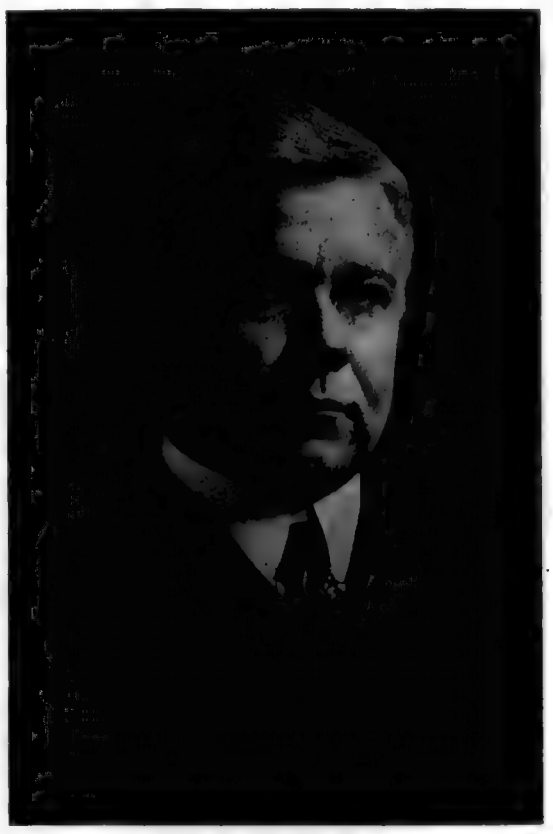
Various Notes.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Society was held at the club rooms in the Jabez Elliott Flower Market, Monday, August 8. Frank V. Vestrich was elected to membership. The club unanimously accepted Frank Voltz's invitationl to hold the next meeting at his home on Dina avenue, Cheviot.

A visit to Max Rudolph's greenhouse plant at College Hill showed everything there to be spick and span. The roses, mostly Brides, Maids and Killarney, show a good, healthy growth and fairly good blooms are being cut. Only one more house in the carnation section remained to be planted and that is undoubtedly finished by this time. Mr. Rudolph has planted the following carnations: White Perfection, Bountiful, Shasta, White Enchantress, Enchantress, Pose-pink Enchantress, Aristocrat, O. P. Bassett, Victory and Beacon. He is cutting a fine crop of Golden Glow mums.



Wm. Murphy has some excellent longiflorums and dahlias.

Heller Bros., New Castle, are sending excellent Beauties to E. G. Gillett.

C. E. Critchell is handling large quantities of asters and gladioli. He also has orchids, new leucothœ and a few Golden Glow mums.

J. A. Peterson is one of the few local growers who have been successful enough with their asters to have them in any quantity.

Advices from Arthur Becker, at Los Angeles, state that he has visited several of the flower stores and nurseries. He writes that the flowers offered there are about the same as we have.

Wm. Gardner, of New Castle, and his father, of London, Ont., were in town last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bruggemann spent last week at John Jennings' camp at Sweetwine, on the Ohio. He says that they had six hand lines and two trot lines in the water, and with this tackle managed to catch nearly fish enough every day for dinner.

Mrs. Henry Schwarz is spending several weeks on a visit at Marietta, O.

Miss Laura Steigler, at Geo. Magrie's, will take a trip that will last a few weeks, through southern Kentucky.

C. P. Dietrich, of Maysville, Ky., stopped in Cincinnati on his way to the lakes. He will get to the convention at Rochester.

John S. Leach, of Hartford City, Ind., was a recent visitor. He is a heavy consignor of asters to this market and expects to consign mums to C. E. Critchell later in the year.

THE HOUSE OF MICHELL.

The group of portraits on this page is the first ever published showing the members of the seed house of Michell. The pictures include the founder, to whose untiring energy and ability the house owes its present strength; his brother, whose fortunes have been linked with the house almost from the first and who has contributed so much to the success; the hope of the house, whose business career has commenced so auspiciously.

There are only five faces in the picture, but as each one of us gazes at it many more rise before the mental view—some dark, some fair, some young, some older—all have helped to make the house of Michell what it is today.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

INCORPORATED BY ACT OF CONGRESS, MARCH 4, '01

Officers for 1910: President, F. R. Pierson, Tarrytown, N. Y.; vice-president, F. W. Vick, Rochester, N. Y.; secretary, H. B. Dorner, Urbana, Ill.; treasurer, W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, N. Y.

Annual convention, Rochester, N. Y., August 16 to 19, 1910.

Results bring advertising.
The Review brings results.

SOME people say that Latania Borbonica is "coming back," but others think it will, like other old favorites, get no farther than Reno.

F. DORNER & SONS CO., La Fayette, Ind., will send out two new carnations in 1911, Gloriosa, bright pink, and White Wonder, a seedling of White Perfection.

THIS is not The Review's special number; this one is all in the day's work. The convention special comes out next week, with a full report of the Rochester meeting.

THE Chicago Florists' Club has voted to invite the S. A. F. to hold its next convention in that city. The single disadvantage under which Chicago labors is that a hall for the trades' display will cost as much as the entire expense of the convention in smaller cities.

CONVENTION NOTES.

The secretary has received notice from the St. Louis Florists' Club that an invitation will be extended the society to hold its 1911 meeting in St. Louis.

Badges have been mailed to all members who have paid their dues. Do not forget to bring them to the convention, as two badges will not be issued on one receipt.

From the reports and letters received, the attendance at the coming convention promises to be the largest in the history of the society.

A. L. Miller, vice-president from eastern New York, says that about 200 from New York city will attend the meeting.

The executive board recommends that the society hold a special meeting at the time of the National Flower Show in Boston.

H. B. Dorner, Sec'y.

SWEET PEA SOCIETY.

There will be a meeting of the National Sweet Pea Society of America at Rochester at 9 a. m. (place announced later), August 18.

This is in response to a request from the secretary of the S. A. F. to such societies as wish to hold a meeting at the annual convention in Rochester, and is in accordance with the resolution passed by the executive committee of the S. A. F. at its spring meeting.

H. A. Bunyard, Sec'y.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Raiser's description: Alvina x Victory; of dwarf growth, forming quickly a very large plant in the field; will produce from early struck cuttings plants furnishing 100 and more blooms per season; adapted for use as a pot plant for Christmas sales; color of the true poinsettia scarlet. Name: Christmas Cheer. H. B. Dorner, Sec'y.

LADIES' S. A. F.

Members will find the secretary at Exhibition hall all day Tuesday, August 16. Please come and get your badges and tickets for the reception and dance, Wednesday evening, August 17.

The directors' meeting will be held at 9:30 a. m. August 17, and the annual meeting at 10:30 a. m. August 17, in the parlors of the Hotel Seneca.

Don't forget your badge pins.

Mrs. C. H. Maynard, Sec'y.

THE POTENT INFLUENCE.

Many factors have influenced advertisers, but it is coming to be more and more general that their advertisements are placed in accordance with the results obtained:

We are glad to acknowledge that we have had far more satisfactory results from The Review than from any other method of advertising.—C. G. James & Son, Hornell, N. Y., August 1, 1910.

Sold entirely out; Review ads do the work.—D. G. Grillbortzer, Alexandria, Va., August 1, 1910.

You need not insert my advertisement another week, as the stock is all sold; just credit me with the amount paid for the insertions I do not need.—J. J. Clayton, West Grove, Pa., August 1, 1910.

The big Special Convention Number of The Review comes out next week. Advertisers must send copy promptly or be left.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The ups and downs have been less pronounced in the last seven days than they were in the fortnight preceding; the demand has been fairly constant and has amounted to a volume sufficient to make an excellent midsummer week. Shipping trade is heavier this summer than it ever has been before, and locally there is always funeral work, with this week some special demand because of the visit of the Knights Templar.

There has been a marked increase in the supply of asters, but not much change otherwise in market conditions. While the cut of asters is several times as great as a week ago, by far the greater part of the stock still is of such poor quality that it has little value. Even those growers who have irrigated their aster patches find their stock not up to the quality they expected. With those who have had no water the blooms are so poor that many are unsalable. With only a fraction of the receipts coming up to the requirements of the better class stores, it is natural that really good asters should be bringing excellent prices, for there are not enough of these to go around. There is an abundance of the medium grade stock and an overabundance of the short, open-centered flowers.

Beauties are possibly a little more plentiful than a week ago. The quality in many cases is excellent, considering that these are August Beauties. The call for roses is not quite so insistent as it was when asters were less plentiful. There now are plenty of roses for all requirements, but in many houses the receipts are all short-stemmed. The stock coming in is cut from young plants; the old plants are in process of being dried off. Those growers who are running houses specially for the production of summer roses are cutting good stock, find it sells well and at fair prices. Killarney and My Maryland continue to lead the pinks, with White Killarney more abundant than Kaiserin, but not so well liked. Bride and Maid are little seen.

Gladioli, as well as asters, show the effect of drought. The common sorts are poor and extremely hard to sell. America and Mrs. Francis King, with a few others of decided color, sell well. Probably more Augusta are seen than any other one variety. It is an extremely useful gladiolus, but the price has fallen because of its overabundance. The demand for Easter lilies is erratic; some days they sell well and other days there is no call whatever. There are so many Easter lilies in the market that auratum is not faring well. A few extremely short-stemmed sweet peas still come in. Cattleyas are scarce. Valley is in better supply than a week ago. Summer flowers sell slowly. The green goods market is quiet.

The wholesalers had their own troubles August 9, the parade of the Knights Templar causing the police to bar all vehicles from the downtown streets during the greater part of the day.

July Makes Record.

The statement that the last two weeks of July brought a grower more money than any two weeks in the year, outside of the holidays, seems almost incredible, but Wendland & Keimel, Elmhurst, make this report.

Mr. Keimel states that the third week in July returned them more money than any other week in their experience, except Christmas week. The week following they cut more roses, but received a trifle less money, the two weeks combining to make the largest fortnight's sales in their history, only excepting last Christmas. During the last half of July they had three houses more glass than at Christmas time, but some of the old plants were in process of drying off and the principal cut was from the young stock. In confirmation of the report, Mr. Keimel shows the statements of E. C. Amling, who is the firm's selling agent.

Notice

Our business is increasing so steadily, and so rapidly, that we are constantly in position to handle to advantage additional consignments of first-class stock.

Growers who are not now in every way satisfied with their connections are invited to see us now—before the opening of the new season.

Club Meeting.

At its meeting August 4 the Chicago Florists' Club adopted resolutions inviting the S. A. F. to hold its next convention in Chicago.

The meeting was exceptionally well attended, a number of members being present whose faces seldom are seen at the club, attracted by the opportunity of voting to extend an invitation to the S. A. F. E. F. Winterson, chairman of the transportation committee, reported that the special train to Rochester will depend on having at least sixty people, and of those present thirteen declared their intention of going. T. C. Yarnall stated that the team to represent the club at the convention will be chosen from the following: Leonard Vaughan, George Asmus, William Graff, E. F. Winterson, ... Huebner and T. C. Yarnall. The club voted $50 toward the expenses of the bowlers and $50 for the use of the entertainment committee on the train.

August Poehlmann presented the favorable report of the committee which had been considering the advisability of inviting the S. A. F. to Chicago. The other members of the committee were C. L. Washburn, W. N. Rudd and J. C. Vaughan. The club voted instructing Mr. Poehlmann to speak in its behalf at Rochester. A committee was appointed to take notes of methods and results at the Rochester

A visit to Frank Oechslin's houses showed them to be in their usual apple-pie order and the stock in fine condition. Mr. Oechslin said that business held up well during July and that so far August had been quite satisfactory. Of course he is looking for an increase in September.

Visitors.

The vacation season and the Knights Templar conclave have combined to bring many visitors to Chicago during the last few days.

Miss Amie Allen, with A. C. Sinram & Co., Denver, stated that her firm is starting a wholesale department in connection with the retail store this fall. She was getting pointers.

George H. Bancroft, of Joseph Bancroft & Son, Cedar Falls, Ia., bought greenhouse material.

A. D. King, of Matoon, Ill., was looking for field-grown carnation plants.

A. E. Kunderd, Goshen, Ind., was showing blooms of his ruffled gladioli, which will be put upon the market next season.

J. W. Furrow, of Furrow & Co., Guthrie, Okla., is in town superintending the marketing of a peach crop.

Other visitors included Mr. and Mrs. John Connon, St. Louis; Miss Willis, chief saleslady for the Idlewild Greenhouses, Memphis, accompanied by Miss Hyatt; A. J. Cultra, of the Onarga Nursery, Onarga, Ill., selling shrubs.

Some of the Sir Knights here for the conclave are: W. A. Bramley, of Bramley & Son, Cleveland; N. Bommersbach, Decatur, Ill.; M. C. Kent, of Kent Bros., Newark, O.; W. A. Clarke, of the Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co., Pittsburg, Pa.; George R. Gause, Richmond, Ind.; W. A. Reiman, Vincennes, Ind., accompanied by Mrs. Reiman; Chas. Brown, Canton, O.; accompanied by Mrs. Brown and son; John C. Chase, Derry, N. H.

Visitors last week included H. V. Hunkel, of Holton & Hunkel, Milwaukee, and Mr. and Mrs. John Connon, of St. Louis.

Youngstown, O.—The Idora Floral & Landscape Co., which was recently organized here, with William Bakody as manager and Frank Ament as superintendent, has its headquarters at Idora Place, a farm of 245 acres, about fifteen minutes' drive from the center of the city. This farm contains about twenty-five acres of beautiful scenic grounds and aquatic gardens, including waterfalls and a trout pool. The rest of the farm comprises a great variety of suitable soils, from sand to rich bottom land, and will be used for the growing of nursery stock, bedding plants, seeds and bulbs. Greenhouses are being erected and landscape work will be done.

BOSTON.

The Market.

So far August business has been fully as good as could be expected—a little better, on the whole, than a year ago, although some growers are prone to say each summer is a little worse than its immediate predecessor. Roses are somewhat improved in quality since we had a cessation of extreme heat. Some nice Beauties still are seen. Kaiserin is exceptionally good, while White Killarney and My Maryland are of fair quality for August. Carnations are poor and rapidly nearing the end. A few decent flowers are seen, but the majority are of little value. Asters are more abundant. They are still mostly Queen of the Earlies. Small lots only of the Comet or Ostrich Plume section are seen. These take the place of carnations in design work.

Sweet peas are, except in rare cases, of poor quality. Double gypsophila still is seen. Demand for valley is light, while cosmos sells slowly. Gladioli from outdoors are more numerous and move more slowly. Lilium longiflorum, L. auratum and L. speciosum all are plentiful, but none of them is in much demand. A few gardenias still come in, but there is no great demand for them, any more than for cattleyas, which are seldom called for now. The quality of adiantum is much better, the fronds now being well ripened. A. Croweanum is much better than A. cuneatum and sells at higher prices. For asparagus the sales are down to their usual summer level.

Various Notes.

Henry M. Robinson & Co. are doing a good midsummer business in cut flowers. They report valley, Beauty roses and sweet peas as specially good quality. They sell a large quantity of Adiantum Croweanum. They recently acquired three additional floors one or two doors from their old stand, covering 13,000 feet of floor space. These are devoted to florists' sundries. One floor is given up to wire designs and a force of men were busy at work on these. It is the intention of the firm to have these new floors packed with goods before fall, and quite a number of new lines will be added. They will make a large exhibit at the coming S. A. F. national show. At present Charles E. Robinson is the man in charge. His brother, Henry, is enjoying his vacation at Green Harbor, Mass., while Joseph Margolis, the third member of the firm, is in Europe, looking out for desirable novelties.

Alfred L. Hutson, the popular salesman for William H. Elliott, left August 4 for Bermuda, where he will spend his vacation. Mr. Hutson usually goes a good distance afield, a year ago taking in the A.-Y.-P. exposition and Alaska.

H. H. Rogers, of South Sudbury, is one of our aster kings. He is shipping fine consignments to George Cartwright, at C Park street, and will have quantities of superb long-stemmed flowers a little later.

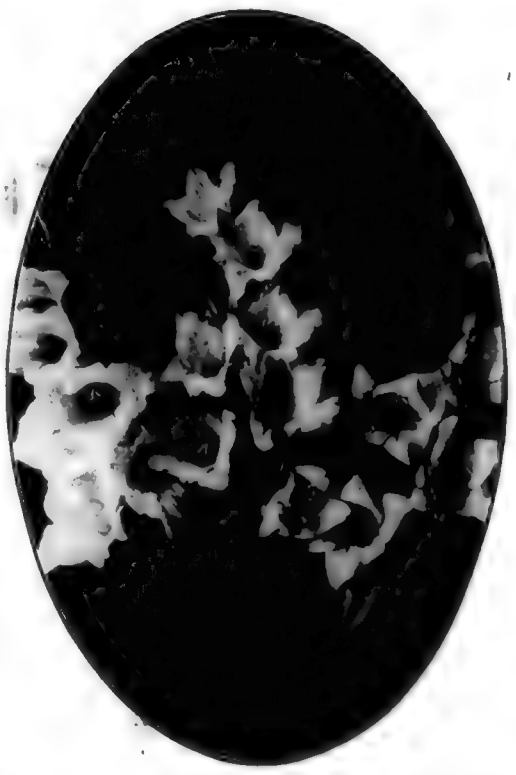
B. Hammond Tracy, of Wenham, is our principal commercial grower of gladioli near Boston. Just now his fields are looking fine, in spite of the continued drought. Mr. Tracy has all the newest and most up-to-date varieties in quantity, and it is a treat to visit his place at this season. He expects to make an exhibit at the Rochester convention.

Andrew K. Rogers, of Readville, has been sick in a hospital with typhoid fever since July 23. He went to see his wife off to Europe only a day previously, and had booked his own passage for August 17.

At a meeting of the board of trustees of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, August 4, appropriations for prizes for 1911 were voted. Some special awards will be made from these for the coming S. A. F. national show in 1911.

Boston will send a good delegation to Rochester August 15. The party will leave in the morning, arriving in Rochester about 10 p. m. the same evening. Those who are still undecided about going should write or telephone E. Allan Peirce, Waltham, at once. The party will have unlimited fun en route, unless all signs fail.

William McGillivray, of West Roxbury, sailed July 27 for a visit to Scotland.



Paine Bros., of Randolph, have already received and boxed quantities of French narcissi. They are one of our leading and most successful bulb firms.

Norris F. Comley, of Lexington, who sells at 2 Park street, is one of the heaviest shippers of asters and gladioli to the market at present.

William Sim, Peter Fisher, M. A. Patten, Thomas Roland, E. A. Peirce, J. K. M. L. Farquhar, T. J. Grey, P. Welch and W. H. Elliott are among those who will attend the Rochester convention. Ladies will be well represented in the party.

William J. Collins, one of Joseph Breck & Sons' staff, who has been a successful contestant at the Gardeners' and Florists' Club's picnics for some years, won the amateur championship at the big annual athletic meet of the Caledonian Club in Boston, August 6. Mr. Collins is third chieftain in the Boston Caledonian Club.

Seedsmen note an earlier demand than usual for all kinds of grass seeds for fall sowing. T. J. Grey & Co. have been exceptionally busy preparing large orders of late.

The William W. Edgar Co. has an extra fine lot of Lorraine begonias, cyclamens, primulas, poinsettias and other plants coming on for Christmas. Their chrysanthemums are also looking extra well.

Littlefield & Wyman have their carnations all housed and looking fine. Some promising seedlings are included.

Alterations are being made in the rear of C Park street, which will give space for a few additional stalls. The auction sale of these will come in a few weeks and the demand seems likely to be strong.

There is likely to be a shortage of carnation plants in this section. Plants are unusually small, owing to the dry summer, and there is a heavier call than usual for field grown plants.

Robert Cameron, W. N. Craig and Edwin Jenkins, of Lenox, will officiate as judges at the coming show in Bar Harbor, Me., which opens August 13.

Farlow has been transferred from the Newton Horticultural Society to the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, amounting to $2,882, the income to be devoted to prizes for pears and foreign grapes. The society has received $13,382 during the last three years in special bequests.

The New England Dahlia Society will probably hold its annual exhibition in connection with the September show of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society in Horticultural hall.

Akron, O.—Work is now well advanced in the construction of the first eleven greenhouses, each 30x160, on the model farm of O. C. Barber, the "match king," at Barberton. As already reported in The Review, it is Mr. Barber's intention, eventually, to place sixty acres under glass. He obtained his ideas, it is said, from several visits to the Guernsey islands, where there are thousands of acres under glass. He will make experiments in the cultivation of fruits and vegetables, especially those of tropical and oriental character.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

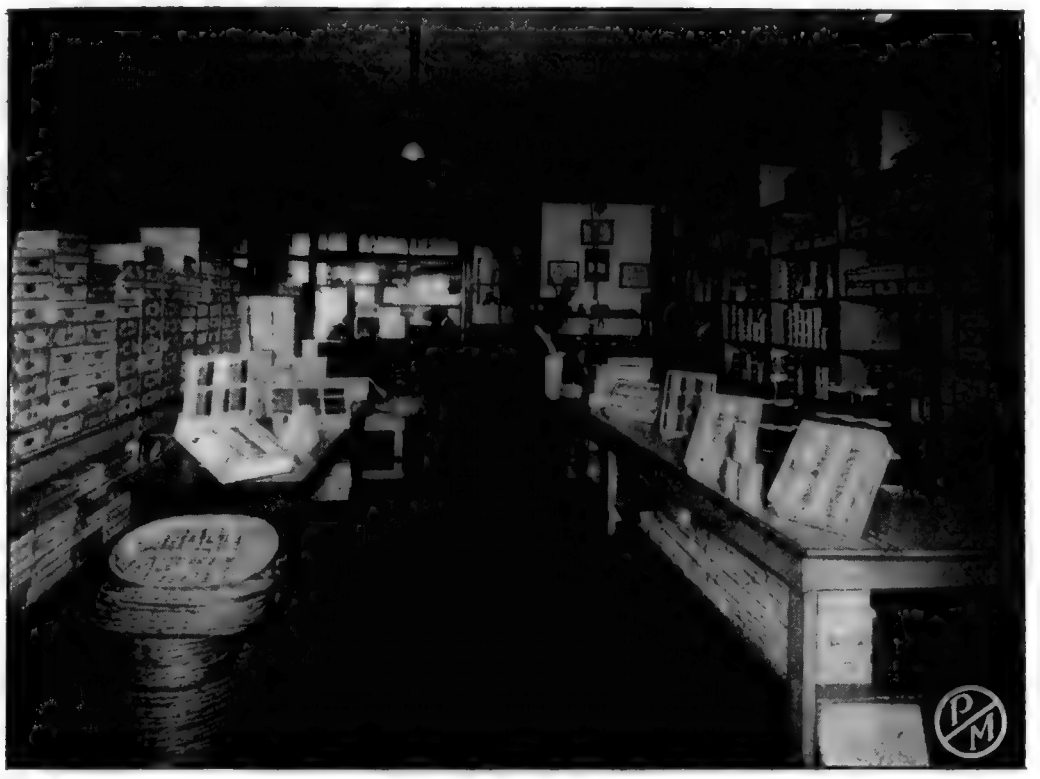
The cut flower market is at a very low point indeed. A small supply of good stock suffices for a small demand. A large supply of poor flowers brings little money. The good flowers include some Beauties, cattleyas, Easter lilies, valley, Kaiserins, Marylands and a few asters and gladioli—few in proportion to the number coming into the market. There are also some excellent sweet peas. The large quantity of poor flowers are either unsalable or bring low prices and make conditions unsatisfactory. The welcome rain of Monday, the first real rain for a long time, will do lots of good to outdoor flowers.

A Real Estate Boom.

The West Philadelphia real estate market has been extraordinarily active, even for West Philadelphia, for a month past. Rumors of purchases for the Wabash, for department stores, for apartment houses, were everywhere in the neighborhood of Fifty-second and Market streets. Reliable information seems to show that 252 properties changed hands, involving an immense sum of money. The deals included the Market street front of the Robert Craig Co., reaching from Forty-ninth to Fiftieth streets, 500 feet front by 214 feet deep, one-half their original property. Of the other half, half, or a quarter of the whole, was sold some time ago, leaving the balance free. The terms of the sale require that the Robert Craig Co. be given five months' notice to move the greenhouses. Such notice must be given between February 15 and July 15. When the notice is given the company will probably fill the remaining quarter of their property with greenhouses and office, removing the balance of the plant to the new place at Norwood.

Jacob Becker's stores at Fifty-second and Market streets were also affected, but although extraordinary prices have been offered, it is believed they have been declined.

Ehret's Floral Arcadia.



One of our thoughtful wholesalers had just been arguing that the market would be greatly improved if the retailer would take a chance and carry enough stock to show their customers. "How, he urged, can a man sell a motor or a horse if he has no motor or horse to show anybody who calls at his place of business? It is just the same with flowers; people want to see what they are buying. You won't find any flowers in many of the retail shops today."

This is certainly true; many of the retailers feel that it is simply wasting flowers to display them in midsummer, especially in these day of telephones.

Knowing that Fred Ehret is progressive and that his business is profitable even during summer, Phil dropped in at Mr. Ehret's Floral Arcadia to see what was doing. The windows in both shops were filled with restful green; those Bible-story pieces of pottery were there, fern filled. In the ice-box there was an excellent assortment of high-grade stock. Ivory, considered by Mr. Ehret as better than Kaiserin in summer, and Golden Gate, another desirable summer variety, Killarney and many other roses, besides a general assortment of good stock, gave the place an air of business. On one side of the store Mrs. Ehret was making up a large design, with two assistants stemming flowers, while nearby two other designs, prettily arranged, showed how some of the flowers were used. When asked whether it paid to carry so large a stock, Mr. Ehret replied, "Certainly; if you don't have flowers you cannot do business."

A Palm Grower.

The visitor who approaches the establishment of Charles D. Ball, at Holmesburg, is impressed by the air of order and neatness that pervades the place—an air so pronounced as to make the place seem in perfect harmony with the schoolhouse on one side and with Mr. Ball's residence on the other.

Inside the greenhouses and in the packing-shed the same order and neatness are to be seen everywhere. The palms are in tiptop condition—not surprising; you expect it, because they are clean. Cleanliness is the key to health in plant life. Charles D. Ball has grown palms for many years—grown them so well that his reputation is national—and he has grown them so constantly that many critical buyers depend upon him for some fine stock. His kentias in both varieties fill many large houses, and both single specimens and made-up plants in large and medium sizes are excellent. He especially prides himself on his making up, experience showing just what styles and sizes of kentias combine most advantageously. In the smaller sizes he is strong, while the seed beds sown in June are already encouragingly green with healthy young leaf spears.

While speaking of seed, Mr. Ball commented on the superiority of Brazilian Latania Borbonica seed. It took years to find out that the Cuban seed of this palm could not produce vigorous stock, with broad, sturdy leaves, but now he is satisfied on this point and all his latania seed this year is and henceforth will be from Brazil.

He is an enthusiastic areca grower—his plants proved it. Cocos Weddelliana looked thrifty. Nice Phœnix Roebelenii were there, but Mr. Ball is not quite sure that there may not be some eleemosynary business here. There were many ferns in thumb pots, and in flats ready for potting, and several other good things. Ardisia crenulata was particularly pleasing, with a surprising number of berries on each 6-inch plant.

Mr. Ball keeps his place in good repair. A house thirty-one years old is producing as fine stock today as one could wish to see. A Hitchings boiler used for the same length of time has just been retired. The hot water expansion tanks, similar to stand pipes, have just been lowered to reduce the pressure.

The Plants at Craig's.

Robert A. Craig favored me with a pre-convention peep into the houses, adding many facts of interest about his pets. The cyclamens are fine; a new size, 8-inch, will be reached at Christmas. The stock is large, showing culture in every stage of advancement. The begonias are grown in almost fabulous numbers, in all the types, in from 2½-inch to 6-inch pots. The quality equals last year's high standard. Poinsettias have taken a leap. The propagation mastered, stock is being manufactured in extraordinary quantity, that bids fair to wipe out the annual shortage in this market. Both singles and doubles are grown, also some for cutting. Crotons are on the increase, Norwood taking the stock when propagated and returning it when finished. The stock is beautifully colored. The thousand and one seedlings are all aimed at improvement on the broader-leaved French lines. Ficus pandurata is exceedingly well grown. Single stems predominate, but there is an increasing number of branched specimens. The object in ferns is to have every size of every variety every day in the year. Of course, I mean nephrolepis. The big demand swept the last part of the standard away in May and June. Now there is an immense stock of ten of the best kinds.

Areca lutescens has been taken up on account of the seed shortage and because it thrives in their heavy soil. A big lot of 6-inch and 8-inch were in flourishing condition. Dracæna amabilis, Dracæna Massangeana, Phœnix Roebelenii and Pandanus utilis were each well represented by good sized blocks of pretty stock.

THE FLORISTS' SUPPLY HOUSE OF AMERICA

Are You Going to Rochester?

WE know lots and lots of florists are going and we hope you will be one of them. We want to meet you there, give you a glad hand and show you our magnificent exhibit of florists' supplies. Mr. Bayersdorfer returned from Europe last week, bringing an unusually fine selection of foreign novelties, just the sort of things you want to attract people next season. You can see them to the best advantage at Rochester, where we will have everything ready for you in the trade exhibit at Convention Hall, August 16, 17 and 18. Staff of salesmen will be there to show them.

Our novelties this season include a little bit of French taste, some German ingenuity and that clever, airy style of workmanship for which the Italians are famous.

We want to show you that a year's work means a year's improvement, a higher plane reached, and that for everything that is best in florists' supplies you can depend on Yours faithfully,

Walter P. Stokes sailed for home August 6 from Rotterdam, on the steamer Potsdam.

Emil H. Gerschick sailed for Europe August 8 to see his family. He will be back in September.

W. J. Sherry, of the Johnson Seed Co., returned August 5 from a delightful week spent at and near the Delaware Water Gap.

C. H. Roney, formerly of Jamestown, N. Y., and lately with the H. F. Michell Co., expects to rent the Penn Rock Co. greenhouses at Silver Side, Del.

E. J. Weaver, of Ronks Station, Pa., has faith in Carnation Victoria, a Winsor-like pink of vigorous growth. This variety somehow missed having a coming-out send-off and is little known.

The Moore Seed Co. has put in some excellent improvements in their store this summer.

George C. Watson is doing some expert work for Robert Buist.

J. Otto Thilow is going to the convention.

Now, a last word about the Rochester convention. The train leaves Reading terminal at 10:30 a. m., Monday, August 15. John Westcott will be in charge of the Philadelphia party. Better go. Phil.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The week opens with cool and cloudy weather, with occasional showers. The long drought is partially broken; the hot spell is over. The crops are greatly benefited and the outlook is less disastrous for those florists who depend upon their outdoor crops and the Long Island gardeners, to whom continued drought would have meant financial ruin. Shipments of everything in the cut flower line, outside of asters and gladioli, are practically suspended. There is little stock and less demand. The best of the roses, except Beauties, do not go above 3 cents and the average is under 1 cent.

Few asters are up to the standard, but the market is literally flooded with hydrangeas and gladioli. Roses are almost all short-stemmed and small. No carnations are worth over $1 per hundred. Most of them do not command half that quotation. There is an abundance of valley and lilies, with prices retrograding. Orchids are not abundant and prices are unchanged.

After the convention the change for the better will undoubtedly begin. The prospects are for the most strenuous season the New York wholesale market ever has known. With several new wholesale houses of acknowledged strength and responsibility, added to those of long standing and national reputation, the coming months promise sharp, clean competition and a concentration of opportunity for buyers, such as the retail market cannot but find to its advantage. Fortunately, the field here widens daily. A population of over 5,000,000 is a good basis for enterprise to build on. New York will surely become again the great shipping center in the east and this fall and winter in its progress and aggregate of sales will be a surprise even to the most optimistic.

Various Notes.

Everybody is talking convention this week, and nearly everybody is going. The transportation committee of the New York Florists' Club has assumed the entire responsibility for the dinner at Glen Summit. All who have not yet purchased railroad tickets will be able to do so on the train, an agent of the Lehigh Valley being in attendance. H. A. THE RAEDLEIN BASKET CO., 713 Milwaukee Avenue, Near Huron Street, CHICAGO

Twenty-eighth street, the store now being completed by Russin & Hanfling, and will open about September 1.

William Mack, with Charles Millang, has just returned from a business visit to Toronto and Buffalo. He speaks highly of the courtesy of E. A. Moore, the wholesale florist of Toronto.

The Wilson-Hoyt Co. will be represented at Rochester by the secretary of the company, C. E. Ferry, and will have a practical and interesting exhibit. The Aphine Co., of Madison, will have an exhibit in charge of Robert Schultz.

C. H. Totty was in the city August 8 and reported the destruction by fire of the large and handsome club house at Morristown, N. J., where the Horticultural Society intended holding its flower show this fall. Negotiations are under way for another club house nearer Madison and the flower show will be held exactly as planned. Mr. Totty has fully recovered from his auto accident and is back and overwhelmed with business, after a week's rest at Canandaigua, N. Y.

Kessler Bros. and their new fern will be represented at Rochester by William Kessler.

Harry Crawbuck, of Brooklyn, is handling some fine asters from his nursery at Summit, N. J.

Wertheimer Bros. will have an exhibit at Rochester, in charge of Sydney B. Wertheimer, S. Eintrecht and M. Cohen.

A year ago August Millang purchased a 13-acre tract on Long Island. Talk about thirteen being unlucky! You could not buy the property now for twice $13,000. The land boom on Long Island is still making lots of noise.

G. H. Blake and his partner, C. Bonnet, of Brooklyn, with their families, will be the guests of Mr. Blake's father at Rochester.

Bowling.

On Tuesday afternoon, August 9, the Long Island Bowling Club had its final practice before the convention. Miesem was back from Germany, and the club was complete. The scores on Tuesday, August 2, were as follows:

So far this month's business has been more natural; that is, as it usually is in summer.

Stock is more plentiful than a few weeks ago. Asters are coming along nicely. Both pink and white roses are plentiful.

Florists' Club's Outing.

There are times when flowers become scarce, but a scarcity of florists is more unusual. On Friday, August 5, there was a great scarcity of florists and their families in Detroit, because the most of them were at Bois Blanc island for the club's annual outing or picnic. The majority of the florists took the morning boat, making a whole day's pleasure of it. Those less fortunate in being able to get away went down on the afternoon boat.

The many games were participated in by all the members in their turn. Liberal prizes were awarded and won, as follows:

Girls' race, 12 or under, Mildred Mills, first; Margarette Cary, second.

Shoe string race, Howard Knope, first; Albert Reno, second.

Three-legged race, Hugh Watson and Ernest Ciessow, first; Tony Schmidt and Herman Mass, second.

Boys' race, 16 years or under, Beno Pautke, first; Marvin Bloy, second.

Girls' race, 16 years or under, Mamie Cary, first; Cath. Mulso, second.

Married ladies' race, Mrs. Mills, first; Mrs. Bloy, second.

Hundred-yard dash for men, Hugh Watson, first; Ernest Ciessow, second.

Egg race for ladies, Miss Ruth Knope, first; Cath. Mulso, second.

Pipe race for men, Ernest Ciessow, first; J. K. Stock, second.

Running broad jump, Hugh Watson, first; T. Miller, second.

Running skip and jump, Hugh Watson, first; T. Miller, second.

Game of quoits, Michael Bloy, first; J. F. Sullivan, second.

Tug of war, won by Jerry Stock and his warriors.

The event of the day was, of course, the ball game, won by Robert Rahaley's Tigers after a hot battle with Bloy's Pets, the final score being 13 to 6.

Prizes were donated by E. A. Scribner, Hugo Schroeter, Albert Pochelon, Michigan Cut Flower Exchange, Michael Bloy, Hammond Paint & Slug Shot Works and Jerome K. Stock. The smokers in the party were kept well supplied with cigars from Kenneth Anderson and the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange.

Various Notes.

Hugo Schroeter left for Buffalo Tuesday, August 10, to meet Mrs. Schroeter, who has been visiting in the east all summer.

William Oldenberg, Schroeter's chauffeur, has returned after two weeks' sojourn in New York city.

out for the last two months and consequently has a fine coat of tan.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Rahaley left on the morning boat on Monday, August 8, to spend a week at Mackinac island, and incidentally spend some of last winter's profits on carnations.

J. F. Sullivan has placed an order for an elegant new refrigerator, to be installed in the fall. Four doors, each thirty inches by five feet, will give access to the interior. One feature of the box will be the small amount of woodwork used in the construction of the front. Removable glass shelves will be provided to hold the shorter-stemmed stock. H. S.

DAYTON, O.

The Market.

At this season of the year it seems to be more of a task than a pleasure to receive orders, as the supply of choice stock is unusually limited. It is often remarked, "If it were not for lilies, what would we do with our summer funeral orders?" Many lilies, such as auratum, Melpomene and giganteum, are extensively grown by many of our florists, and they appear to be quite the thing, as lilies take well, no matter what the occasion for which they are used. There are but few carnations on the market, and the quality of these few is not worthy of comment, but better days are coming for the carnation. It is the same with roses; while they are as plentiful as can be expected, still they are quite small. Some pretty good buds are coming in from the young plants, but with short stems; nevertheless, they work in to good advantage in designing.

Not many of the florists are growing more than a small quantity of asters this year, as past experience has taught them to be cautious, as so many of the gardeners throughout the country bring them in and sell them at lower prices than are profitable for the florists. This also holds true with gladioli, which can be picked up on the market at $2 per hundred. Funeral work is practically the only thing that keeps business up and stock on the move, but there has been quite a satisfactory demand along this line. Weather conditions last week were favorable.

Various Notes.

George Bartholomew entertained his growers, their wives and families at a picnic, August 7, at the National Military Home. A pleasant afternoon was spent, after which a chicken supper was served in the large picnic grove adjoining.

The Miami Floral Co. has increased the capital stock from $50,000 to $75,000.

John Boehner left August 7 for Chicago, where he will attend the triennial conclave of the Knights Templar.

She was accompanied home by Miss Lulu Cornwall and Arthur Cornwall, of Elburn, Ill., who will be guests at the Bartholomew home for a few weeks.

Mrs. Bertha Hendrichs, who has been spending several days with friends in Cincinnati, O., returned home last week. She reports a fine time.

A. F. Longren, representative of E. H. Hunt, Chicago, visited the trade last week. Other visitors were Henry Ehrhardt, Sidney O., and Adam Weber, of Cincinnati.

H. H. Ritter is remodeling his plant somewhat by tearing down two of his old houses and rebuilding them as one, thus making a more spacious house. He reports that business has been quite satisfactory with him this summer and that his chrysanthemums are coming on well; he expects to start cutting them next month.

Will Ritter and wife have been camping along the Miami river for the last six weeks, with a party of about fifty. They report that camping life agrees with them and that they enjoy it immensely. R. A. B.

The Market.

The weather continues delightfully cool and a majority of our townspeople, who have been rusticating in the country, are with us again. The schools have resumed and this is an important factor as well. Flowers of all kinds are plentiful and the prices remain well down. Lilium rubrum and L. album are now in full crop and find a ready sale. Amaryllis is coming into town in large quantities, but the early sorts are not in great demand.

Asters are the ruling flower at present and, although the prices are not as high as formerly, they move quite well. A few early mums from under glass are shown and the outside stock of this popular flower looks well and promises a big crop later on. Sweet peas are not of good quality and show the lateness of the season, while gladioli have not sold as well for the last two weeks as their quality should warrant, and the same can be said of dahlias. Orchids are scarce and in good demand and this is also true of fancy stock of roses of practically all kinds.

Business, with the exception of funeral work, moves slowly, but the trend of the market is more favorable than it has been at any time this summer.

Various Notes.

A. J. Nevraumont is spending two weeks' vacation at San Rafael.

Robert Armstrong, well known to the gardening fraternity on the Pacific coast, has taken charge of the city conservatories of Oakland.

W. W. Saunders, formerly of this city, but now a resident of Cloverdale, is in town on a short visit.

The Garden City Pottery Co., of San Jose, has purchased the ground, buildings and machinery of the East Ninth Street Pottery Works, of Oakland, Cal.

E. C. Clarke, of Clarke Bros., Portland, Ore., is in town.

About fifty growers and wholesalers have joined the recently organized Florists' Board of Trade.

John R. Sievers and C. H. Cornwell are no longer connected with the Sievers Floral Co. P. J. Orr is the present manager of the house.

Miss Hulda Block, associated with the Shibeley-Mann Co., has announced her engagement to Walter McGinn, the well known contractor. The wedding will take place August 17, in this city.

John Gill, of the E. Gill Nursery Co., is absent on a trip to southern California.

The H. M. Sanborn Co. will occupy its new premises on Telegraph avenue, Berkeley, about September 1.

J. A. Carbone, of West Berkeley, has received 1,000 orchids for his new orchid houses. They are principally Cattleya gigas and C. Gaskelliana. Mr. Carbone is just completing a new boiler house, and when this is finished he will have one of the most up-to-date plants on the coast.

it is nevertheless a fact that within the last two years over forty establishments devoted to the growing of cut flowers for market have been leased by the owners to Japanese. These places vary in size from 5,000 to 30,000 feet of glass and are being managed by Japanese help exclusively, while the products are sold to American storekeepers. G.

SEATTLE, WASH.

The Market.

Just at this time stock of all kinds is poor, on account of the warm, dry weather, but sweet peas are arriving in abundance and a few choice Ulrich Brunner roses are to be had. Gladioli are coming in rather late this year, but a few are to be had, with the prospects good for a large crop later.

Carnations are much better here during the summer time than in any other part of the country, owing to the cool summer weather we have. Most of the growers keep several benches to cut from during the summer months.

Various Notes.

The last season was evidently a prosperous one for all Seattle florists. The Hollywood Gardens are building four more greenhouses and will soon open a fine new store, which Manager W. R. Gibson says will be the finest on the coast. The Seattle Floral Co. is remodeling two houses and building an additional one. G. W. Scott & Son are erecting one more house, besides remodeling the steam plant, and several of the suburban florists are increasing their glass area.

Morris Davis, formerly at Graff's Flower Shop, opened a new store at 1412 Second avenue. T. B. Pritchard, who was manager for the same firm, is now connected with the Hollywood Gardens.

The H. Harrington Co. opened a branch store in the new Henry building. Allen Beal is in charge. C. A. Bate, manager of the main store for the same firm, has just returned from a three weeks' hunting and fishing trip in the mountains of British Columbia.

C. A. Sullivan and Gus Petterson, both of the L. W. McCoy force, went away for vacations last week. Mr. Sullivan is hunting in the Cascade mountains, while Mr. Petterson is spending his time feeding the fish at Hood's canal.

Miss Josephine Orgren, of the C. N. Sandahl Nursery & Seed Co., is spending her vacation in northern Washington, and C. N. Sandahl is spending most of his time at his summer home.

The number of visitors we have is good evidence of the slack season which prevails at this time of year. Wm. S. Sibson, of the Sibson Rose Nurseries, Portland, Ore., is here for a few days and will soon leave for Canada, where he expects to spend a few weeks. W. H. Hopkins, of Kent, Wash., was here recently on a business trip. Mr. Rolker, of A. Rolker & Sons, New York, is here for a few days.

C. N. Sandahl & Sons have just been informed that they have been granted the agency for the Yokohama Nursery Co., the largest nursery firm in Japan. Their first consignment, which is on its way, will include a full Japanese stock of bulbs and greenhouse plants.

Graff's Flower Shop is in the hands of a receiver. Gus Bjorkman was appointed by the court to act in that capacity.

W. R. Gibson, of the Hollywood Gardens, reports the purchase of an auto, which will be used for delivery in connection with the new store. T. B. P.

THE REVIEW surely does the work; received orders next day after the paper came for all the stock I could supply.—P. K. Stokesberry, Leetonia, O.

The Market.

Covering the market and the trade in the flower business at this time of the year is a hard proposition. From reports of the store men some say things were mighty dull last week and others say they were quite busy with funeral work, but outside of this kind of work little, if anything, is going on. The wholesalers also say that light colors only are in demand. Stock is not any too plentiful at present; first-class roses and carnations are out of the question, and only a few of any grade are coming in.

Gladioli are selling well and are up to 3 and 4 cents again. Tuberose stalks are coming and the first bring $5 per hundred. More asters than anything else are now in the market. Asparagus and smilax sold well all week.

Various Notes.

F. W. Bruenig, one of our south side florists, is cutting a fine lot of outdoor stock from his Columbia, Ill., place. He expects to make the trip to Rochester for the S. A. F. meeting.

Julius Dillhoff, representing Schloss Bros., the ribbon house of New York, and F. J. Farney, representing M. Rice & Co., of Philadelphia, called on the trade last week.

Kalisch Bros. have commenced the reconstruction of their greenhouses, as they are going heavily into the orchid growing business.

It seems certain now that the two big department stores, Barr's and Schaper Bros., will have cut flower departments when their alterations are complete this fall.

The Metropolitan Floral Co. and John Burke's new place will open their doors for business Monday, August 15.

Edwin Denker, of St. Charles, Mo., left Thursday night, August 4, for an eastern trip to New York, to wind up at Rochester, and will return home by the way of Chicago.

The W. C. Smith Wholesale Floral Co. has commenced alterations on the store front so as to give them access to the three upper floors from the inside, as they have leased the entire building. William Ossic, one of the company, will attend the S. A. F. convention.

E. W. Guy, of Belleville, was a caller last week. He says he is now rebuilding his greenhouses, which were partly destroyed by fire last May.

Robert J. Windler, of South Grand avenue, says his business kept up quite well all through July. The bulk of the work was for funerals.

Convention matters are being discussed nowadays. The arrangements are complete and in the hands of State Vice-President Otto G. Koenig. The St. Louis delegation will not be as large as usual, although quite a few will make the trip. those who are seen these cool evenings on the west end boulevards are: Fred C. Weber, C. C. Sanders, Fred H. Weber and C. De Wever, with their families. It will not be long before some of our wholesalers will be following their example, as Henry Berning and W. C. Smith each contemplate a purchase soon.

The Schmaus brothers, florists at Paducah, Ky., visited St. Louis in their automobile. After spending a few days here, they returned home.

In looking through the downtown seed houses, we find them taking advantage of the dull season by renovating their establishments.

Henry Schisler, of the Schisler Grain Co., is in Chicago this week, attending the Knights Templar conclave.

Corneli Bros. are now proprietors of the Schisler-Corneli Seed Co.

The St. Louis Seed Co., the Plant Seed Co., the Tinsley Seed Co. and D. I. Bushnell & Co. are all making preparations for a busy fall season.

The staff of the city forester's office say they are having a great deal of trouble with the evergreen bagworm, which is denuding the city's trees, and have found as many as 1,000 cocoons on one tree. They have a machine which scatters an arsenical solution, which can spray 100 trees a day, but up to date have been unsuccessful in destroying any of the bagworms with this solution. The department is now looking for something more powerful to destroy them.

The seventh annual meeting of the American Apple Growers' Association will be held this week at the Planters hotel. The directors of the Missouri Botanical Garden have invited all the members, including the florists, nurserymen and gardeners of the city, to the Henry Shaw banquet, which takes place Thursday night at the Southern hotel. Rome, N. Y.—W. T. Hughes, the River street florist, has purchased some property at 211 West Liberty street and will erect a greenhouse and office there, to be conducted in connection with the River street place.

Chillicothe, Mo.—R. L. Isherwood was recently elected as vice-president of the Chillicothe Bank, and the citizens of the town seem to be agreed in the opinion that his connection with the institution will add strength and prestige to it. He has had previous experience as a bank director. He will continue to operate his greenhouses on West Calhoun street.

Seed Trade News

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

LATER reports do not make the onion seed crop prospects quite as good as earlier accounts.

F. B. KING, president of Mandeville & King Co., Rochester, is on a fishing trip through Georgian bay.

ROBERT FULTON, of Henry & Lee, New York, is in Japan superintending the shipment of the longiflorums.

HENRY A. SALZER and family, La Crosse, Wis., are spending the summer in a cottage at Lake Oconomowoc.

THE Connecticut growers of sweet corn for seed say the present condition of the crop is rather above the average.

THE pea crop in England is described as "even worse than in 1909." That fits here, only with us it is very much worse.

SOME of the longiflorum bulbs are on the way. As with Harrisii and Dutch bulbs, they will be in earlier than usual this season.

W. R. FRENCH, who for a quarter of a century has handled seeds in connection with hides at Waterloo, Ia., will retire from active business. He has sold his stock and good will to N. J. Berkley, who has dealt in the same lines.

THE sweet pea novelty of the year in England surely was not named with a view to catchiness; they call it Stirling Stent! The color is described as an orange vermilion shade. It will be sent out by E. W. King & Co., Coggeshall, Essex.

THE bean crops are spotty. Some fields look well, while others will turn out almost a total failure. As a result, the trade must needs have a report on each individual planting; there can be no such thing as figuring on average deliveries.

THE pea growers are up in the air; they are reluctant even to make a guess as to the percentage of deliveries. It now appears that the late sorts, from which better things had been expected, will turn out fully as short as the earlies. There is every indication that the price of peas this season will be fixed by what the traffic will bear.

Consignee.	Cases.

Crossmond, L. D., & Co.	253
For export	38

GOVERNMENT CROP REPORT.

In spite of a shrinkage of 224,000,000 bushels in the indicated yield of corn, the government crop report as of August 1, made public August 8, was regarded as distinctly favorable. The report showed a condition figure only six points below the condition July 1, when crop killers had been busy almost the whole month. A surprise was the reduction in the condition of the Nebraska corn crop, as it was not believed the crop in that state had been much injured. The government made the loss of condition in Nebraska greater than in Kansas, and with the exception of Oklahoma the loss in the former state was the greatest of any one of the corn states. Texas and Kansas each showed a condition of 78, while Nebraska was only 65 and Oklahoma, which suffered most from hot winds, was given a condition of 57.

Preliminary returns indicate a winter wheat yield of 15.8 bushels per acre, or

There is perhaps nothing so detrimental to success for a grower as poor flowers. No matter where a florist's store is located or how well it is decorated, if the quality of flowers is not there, the best customers will go elsewhere and buy. There is nothing finer than a pure White Lily of good quality in its place, and as it requires a bulb of good quality to produce such finery, it is absolutely necessary that only the best bulbs be procured. When you are in the market for really good Easter Lily Bulbs, write us—we can supply you.

has the weather been favorable. At Chicago the spring was extremely cold, followed by severe and prolonged drought; harvesting began last week and the estimate is that the district will give little more than half a crop. In the Ohio district almost the opposite condition prevailed; the season was too wet, but the crop is light. At Louisville, where operations are a number of days earlier than in other onion set districts, the harvest has shown a falling off from earlier estimates, which were not for large yield. The western crops average better than the others, but are too small in acreage to cut much figure.

GROWING SEED BEANS.

The present crop of seed beans is in more or less jeopardy, which makes timely the following extract from a manuscript by W. W. Tracy, of which B. T. Galloway, chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, in transmitting it to the Department of Agriculture for publication said: "Dr. Tracy is recognized by the American seed trade as an authority on all matters relating to the nomenclature, growing, harvesting and handling of vegetable seeds. This paper is based on the author's personal experience in this field of activity."

The bean plant, says Dr. Tracy, particularly if it be one of our garden varieties, is exceedingly sensitive to unfavorable conditions of heat and moisture. If the soil is damp, but not quite moist enough to secure good germination, the seed will malt or sprout and die; if it is only a little too wet the seed will germinate, but die without expanding its true leaves.

Young bean plants would be killed or permanently dwarfed by a drenching rain which would have no permanent effect upon a young plant of corn.

LILIUM HARRISII

Now Ready For Delivery

Our first consignments have just reached us, and our advance orders are all filled. In view of the fact that crop is shorter than last year, we advise those who have not already ordered to lose no time doing so. Last year we were not able to meet the demand for our selected Harrisii on late orders. At present we have a good supply, and will be able to take care of early orders; but there should be no delay in ordering, as there is sure to be a scarcity of good stock, especially in the large sizes. We offer selected stock of the original true Harrisii for early forcing, grown from the original true stock—splendid stock for early forcing, for which purpose Harrisii is so valuable. Our stock is not picked up indiscriminately from different sources, but is grown from one stock, and will be found very superior to the ordinary Harrisii usually offered, both in regard to freedom from disease and purity, and not the late type now so often furnished.

6 to 7-inch bulbs, 350 to the case, $17.50 per case; less quantities, $ 6.00 per 100.
7 to 9-inch bulbs, 200 to the case, 18.00 per case; less quantities, 10.00 per 100.

If, when the plants are in flower, the supply of moisture is shortened, either by drought or by injury to the roots through too close or too deep cultivation, so that the plants wilt, be it ever so little, the pods will fail to fill, and it is very seldom that the later-maturing pods on the plant will be any better, even if more favorable conditions bring out an abundant bloom.

From the starting of the seed into growth to the storage of the ripened grain, beans are exceedingly sensitive to unfavorable conditions of moisture. In spite of this, seed beans will often prove a profitable farm crop on good land anywhere in the United States north of latitude 40 or 41 degrees and east of the Dakotas. South of latitude 41 degrees beans are so liable to injury by the bean weevil, and in much of the country west of central Wisconsin the crop is so likely to be cut off by dry, hot winds at the time the plants are in flower, that seed beans are rarely profitable for many successive seasons, though some fine crops of seed beans have been grown in Minnesota and the Dakotas.

Seed of Lima beans, as well as of pole varieties of garden beans, can be very profitably grown along the western coast of California, where the night winds from the ocean furnish the necessary moisture and the crop seldom suffers from drenching rains. Of late years seed of garden bush beans has also been grown to some extent in northern California, where there is less liability to disease than in the bean-growing sections of the east, but, in general, California crops are grown on farms wholly devoted to growing seed, rather than as a part of the regular rotation of mixed farming.

Soil and Climate.

Garden beans have developed into many quite distinct varieties adapted to different soils, and it is quite essential to their profitable culture as a seed crop that one plant the sorts best suited to his particular soil conditions. This can only be learned through test plantings of the different sorts.

It will generally be found that varieties with thick, fleshy pods, like the Valentine, do best on rich clay soils and are apt to fail on light sandy ones, where such sorts as the Long Yellow, which rarely succeeds on clay soil, would give their best crops. Generally the large, wax-podded sorts, like Kidney Wax, give their best returns on rich black lands, where the flat, green-podded sorts would be apt to run to vine, with small return of seed. Most of the wax-podded sorts, particularly those with fleshy pods, require rich, strong, moist soils, while the smaller, flat, green-podded sorts will often give good returns on light, warm, sandy soils on which other kinds would do poorly.

Conditions of soil and climate often greatly modify the character of bean plants, particularly as to the size and smoothness of the leaves and the size, fleshiness and color of the green pods and beans. The relative size and color of the dry seed are very largely affected by the climatic conditions at the time of ripening, but differences in these respects, even when they are continued for several seasons, are not transmitted in any appreciable degree through the seed.

Location of Bean Crops for Seed.

Lima and other pole beans grown without poles in southern California for many generations take to poles as well and mature as early as the same sorts grown on poles in Connecticut. Certain diseases, such as anthracnose and rust, are often carried in the seed, and there is great practical advantage in the use of seed which is the product of healthy plants.

The structure of the flowers of the bean seems to guard against cross-pollination as effectually as that of the flowers of the corn plant provides for it, and seedsmen do not generally ask that growers shall isolate fields of different varieties, though they often insist that crops of different sorts shall be stored and handled in separate buildings.

The cultural methods which will give the best crop of seed beans do not differ materially from those used in growing beans for commercial purposes. It may be well, however, to refer to some minor differences in cultural methods and requirements.

No matter how well founded may be the claim of some bean growers that with commercial beans greater profit will come from heavy seeding, certainly better seed beans can be grown by light seeding. There is a great difference in the quantity of seed needed with different varieties, eight to twelve quarts to the acre being as liberal a seeding for a small-seeded but large-vined sort, like the Crystal White Wax, as a full bushel would be for some of the larger varieties, like the Flageolet. The cost of growing seed beans is somewhat increased by the work of roguing out the mixed and inferior plants, but when good stock seed is used there should not be more than one rogue plant to every ten or twenty rods of drill; often there will not be more than one to fifty or 100 rods.

Many sorts of garden beans can be grown, gathered, thrashed and fitted for market at less cost than field beans, and they generally yield fully as much to the acre; but other sorts, particularly some of the large, fleshy, wax-podded varieties, require richer soil and a great deal more care in curing and thrashing, and they generally yield less to the acre.

The labor necessary to thrash and clean seed beans is largely governed by weather conditions at the time of harvest. The appearance of the sample is very dependent upon the skill of the thrasher. The lot secured by one man will contain so many split beans, and those covered with sections of pods, that it cannot profitably be made fit for seedsmen's use, while another man with the same machine will secure a fairly clean lot from the same crop. The labor and skill necessary to obtain a good result are also quite dependent upon the variety.

The pods of some of the very fleshy, wax-podded sorts shrink down about the beans and in thrashing break so as to leave many of the beans incased in sections of the pod. It is sometimes necessary to run the seed of such sorts through a rubber made of a cylinder, with many teeth about one-fourth of an inch long and three-eighths of an inch in diameter, revolving comparatively slowly against concaves covered with ribbed rubber or very coarse, heavy canvas. On account of the difficulty in growing and thrashing some varieties, seedsmen should, and commonly do, make a difference in the prices paid, though often this difference is not sufficient to balance the actual difference in the cost of growing, thrashing and recleaning.

Yield Per Acre and Prices.

The yield varies greatly with the variety, season, soil and the skill and carefulness of the grower. It ranges from ten to thirty bushels per acre, with phenomenal yields up to forty or even sixty bushels, a yield of ten bushels being comparable as to quantity with one of eighteen to twenty bushels of wheat. Seedsmen generally base the area contracted for on a yield of eight to twelve bushels to the acre.

beans vary with the season and are more influenced by the ruling prices for commercial beans than is the case with corn. At present they range from $1.30 to $2.30 a bushel for the sorts which are most easily grown and thrashed, and from $1.50 to $2.50 for those which require greater care and labor. Prices for growing Lima and pole beans range from $2.75 to $4 a bushel.

The unit of measurement in farmers' contracts for growing beans is usually a nominal bushel of sufficient weight to leave sixty pounds after all cleaning and hand picking necessary to make the beans fit for seedsmen's use. There is, however, a difference, sometimes amounting to from five to ten per cent, in the actual weight of the same bulk of equally clean and well-cured lots of different varieties.

Minimum Acceptable Viability.

The minimum percentage of viability accepted by seedsmen on growing contracts varies somewhat in different seasons and with different varieties of beans, and runs from eighty to ninety-five per cent. There is less excuse for variation in the percentage of acceptable viability with beans than with corn, for beans usually grow as well the second season as the first, and a large proportion of the beans which are not viable will be removed in hand cleaning.

Their appearance is an important factor in determining the acceptability of beans, and any distinct stain or discoloration on as many as eight or ten per cent of the beans justifies their rejection, even if they be of high viability. Seedsmen claim the right to purchase, at an equitable reduction in price, beans grown under contract which, from discoloration or want of viability, are not acceptable on the terms of the contract.

ANEMONES FOR CUT FLOWERS.

Are Anemone coronaria and A. fulgens of any value as cut flowers, and are they hardy in this country? What treatment do they require in the state of Michigan? H. H. G.

These charming bulbous flowers would not prove reliably hardy in your state. It is true that you could plant them quite late in a well drained and sheltered piece of ground, mulch them well and probably many might live. They would, however, flower disappointingly. At the time they would open we usually get some hot and dry weather, and these conditions they do not like. I have seen some fair anemones grown near the northern Atlantic seaboard, but poor as compared with what we find in Europe. The Pacific coast states should, however, be able to grow these much better.

The best way for you to grow these anemones would be either planted out in a coldframe, or in flats containing five inches of soil. They also do well in a bench in a cold greenhouse, where a temperature suitable for violets, 40 to 42 degrees at night, is kept in winter. They like good drainage and a light, rather rich soil, to which plenty of sand has been added. The cut flowers of these anemones are popular in all the big flower centers and are eagerly bought up by the up-to-date stores. They last remarkably well in a cut state. The variety of A. coronaria named The Bride is of a beautiful pure white color. These anemones will not stand forcing at all. C.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Officers for 1910-11: Pres., W. P. Stark, Louisiana, Mo.; Vice-pres., E. S. Welch, Shenandoah, Ia.; Sec'y, John Hall, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. Thirty-sixth annual meeting, St. Louis, June 1911.

THE Manetti stocks are not a good crop in England this season.

JOHN T. WITHERS, Jersey City, N. J., has returned from his trip around the world.

THE Southwestern Nursery Co., of Troy, O., has increased its capital stock from $10,000 to $25,000.

WILLIAM A. PETERSON, proprietor of Peterson Nursery, Chicago, is on an automobile tour of New England. He is accompanied by Mrs. Peterson, their oldest boy, and some friends.

NOT A CONSOLIDATION.

A daily newspaper recently contained the announcement that Harry G. Patten, son of C. G. Patten, the veteran nurseryman of Charles City, Ia., had taken charge of the field work of the Sherman Nursery Co., at the same city. Added to this announcement was the assertion that "this virtually means a merging of the two firms, Patten & Son and the Sherman Nursery Co., the total area of whose combined nurseries is 1,400 acres."

When this report was submitted to E. M. Sherman, president of the Sherman Nursery Co., he made the following statement to The Review: "The report referred to is only true in part. The facts are that H. G. Patten has withdrawn from the business management of the firm of C. G. Patten & Son, but still retains his interest in the orchards belonging to that firm, and has accepted a position as superintendent of the grounds of our nursery. E. C. Patten, a younger son of C. G. Patten, has assumed charge of the office business of C. G. Patten & Son."

TEST ON ROSE PLANT DUTY.

Under the new tariff law the duty on rose plants is 4 cents each, but the duty on Manetti multiflora or briar roses is only $1 per thousand. An importation by L. Gillier & Co., New York, consisted of roses classified by the collector under the provision in paragraph 264, tariff act of 1909, for "rose plants budded, grafted, or grown on their own roots," but by the importer claimed to be dutiable under the provision in the same paragraph for "Manetti multiflora and briar rose." The protest has been sustained. In his decision Waite, general appraiser, said: "Considerable testimony of men who appear to be well posted in the growth of rose plants was taken in this case, and we think it clearly appears from this testimony that the budding or grafting of the plants in question had failed from some cause or other, and the goods as imported were simply the plants of the multiflora and should have been so assessed."

EVILS OF THE REPLACE POLICY.

[A paper read by J. R. Mayhew, of Waxahachie, Tex., before the American Association of Nurserymen at the Denver convention, continued from the Review of August 4.]

After reviewing the reason for taking up the question of policy in replacing stock at less than full price, and its effect on the customer, Mr. Mayhew continued:

What is the Effect on Salesmen?

Those of us doing a retail business depend, to a large extent, on making sales through traveling men. Most of us have had more or less road experience prior to our general service, and realize fully that salesmanship is largely belief in the worth of the commodity offered for sale. If the salesman has confidence in himself, his employers and the commodity offered, and goes to patrons who have confidence in the integrity and methods of the concern represented, his success is assured. Without this confidence his success is, to say the least, hampered.

In figuring a salesman's worth we necessarily consider many things, not least of which is the volume of business at a stipulated price. If his services are satisfactory, it becomes necessary that he sell stock for a profit, and our profit is represented by prices named in the catalogue; hence it becomes necessary that the salesman maintain the printed schedule of prices. To maintain prices, he must believe they are just, that they have been wisely figured and that it is a crime against his company to cut prices. Such a salesman is a valuable asset and will make you money each season. He must, of necessity, have other strong characteristics, but the one mentioned serves my argument. How can confidence in the worth of the commodity he is sent out to sell be stimulated? Does the fact that a premium is placed on the customer's carelessness tend to make the salesman believe more firmly in the worth of trees and plants? Does he figure that our stock is of such peculiar hardiness that it should stand droughts, freezes, cattle, etc., and come out conqueror in the end or be replaced free or at one-half price, or does he figure our prices are too high to begin with?

The salesman, my friends, is no fool; if he is, you do not want him. He thinks about this question as does any other sane man, and reaches the same conclusions. Let us remove these question marks and show the salesman, the customer, and the public generally, that the product of our brain and brawn has a real rather than an imaginary value. Why, I have heard nurserymen, in defending the practice, declare they could do a profitable business by replacing trees at one-half the catalogued price. If true, which I doubt seriously, their prices are too high to begin with, or they have learned to grow trees at a lower price than have I.

LETTUCE FOR THANKSGIVING.

I want to get a crop of lettuce in one of my greenhouses ready for Thanksgiving. Will you kindly advise me as to when the seed should be sown and how the little plants should be handled until they are planted in their permanent quarters? I imagine it is too hot for the plants inside the greenhouse, until the middle of September.

J. M.

The variety of leaf lettuce called Grand Rapids can be marketed from seed in ten weeks if the weather is good, but in winter in bad weather it takes longer, and head lettuce takes about two weeks longer than leaf lettuce. It is better to figure far enough ahead to be sure to have the crop ready a short time before it is wanted, as it is better to hold it a week or two than to cut it too small.

Seed planted about September 15 ought to make nice lettuce for Thanksgiving, because the weather is usually fine in October. Transplant the seedlings as soon as large enough, placing them about one and one-half or two inches apart, and hold them there until they are pretty good sized plants; then transplant them to permanent beds, spacing about 6x8 inches. Keep the houses as cool as possible, using plenty of ventilation night and day. Stir the soil frequently and water between the plants.

TUNE—JOHN BROWN'S BODY

In the early morning's sunlight upon the sea I go
To search the lands of Europe for the finest plants that grow.
I only buy the very best, those only you must know
Are good enough for me.

In the towns of little Belgium there are Araucarias fair,
And Azaleas with their promise of enchanting beauty rare.
I mean to beat the world with my shipment over there,
Just good enough for me.

I leave at home in my own house the loveliest Ferns on earth,
And mean to match them with tall Palms of quite transcendent worth.
My Cyclamen and Primroses I've tended from their birth—
All good enough for me.

When I come home I want you all to come and see my show.
The sight of my Lorraines will set your heart and eyes aglow;
Their health and beauty, bloom and leaf—then only will you know
What's good enough for me.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

While trade seems to be extremely quiet, the reports from the retail stores would indicate that business last month was slightly better than in July of last year.

There are quantities of flowers in the market at present, including Beauties, roses, lilies, asters and gladioli. Asters are here in quantity, but not quality, and probably there will be no good ones until the late ones arrive.

This section is sadly in need of rain and, if it does not arrive soon, there will be big losses on all late crops. Corn and potatoes are suffering now and market gardeners who are not equipped for watering are in bad shape.

Various Notes.

F. H. Westhoff, at Allison park, is putting up a new carnation house.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. has finished planting its last house of carnations and the stock looks fine. Roses are also in good shape for this season of the year.

If all in this city who are making inquiries, and are expecting to attend the S. A. F. convention, really go, Pittsburg will have a big delegation. There probably never was as much enthusiasm. Someone says the boys have more money than usual.

James Higgins, of Mrs. E. A. Williams' force, will leave, accompanied by his wife, for a vacation in the east, where he will visit his old home and meet his many friends.

John Walker, of Youngstown, O., spent several days in the city. William Diamond, head salesman for Mr. Walker, is also spending his vacation in this vicinity.

E. C. Ludwig and his son, De Forrest, will be among the convention attendants; also Ben Elliott, Howard Carney, John Jones and William Loew. These are boosters and are only a few of the crowd who expect to go.

T. P. Langhans is back at his post, looking much improved on account of his vacation, and you need not believe his fish stories if not so disposed.

George Marshall changed color while camping at the lakes and is being passed up by strangers, who take him for the porter.

W. H. Jaqueth, Rock Creek, O., has been a visitor for several days.

Ernest Zieger, who has been in Germany since Easter, is back with us, looking like a new man and chuck-full of enthusiasm, although he has not started in on anything.

P. S. Randolph has purchased ten acres adjoining the Randolph & McClements property on Stanton avenue, where his sons will erect greenhouses for growing palms, ferns, etc., for the wholesale trade. Hoo-Hoo.

Select Ferns for Fine Store Trade

Elegantissima compacta. Bears the same relation to Elegantissima that Scottii does to Bostoniensis. Dwarf and compact. Especially fine in the small sizes. Extra fine plants, 4-in. pots, 25c each; 6-in. pots, 50c each; strong young plants, 2¼-in. pots for growing on, $10.00 per 100.

Superbissima. Introduced by us in 1908. Very distinct and very popular. 4-in. pots, 25c each; large specimens, 8-in. pans, $1.00 each.

Bostoniensis. Good plants, 6-in. pots, 50c each.

ROCHESTER.

The Market.

Business during the last two weeks has been quite satisfactory. No surplus stock has accumulated, the trade using everything as fast as it came in. Asters are coming into the market in reasonable quantity and the quality is excellent, Queen of the Market showing exceptionally well. Asters are selling at from 15 cents to 20 cents a dozen retail. Sweet peas are running a little below grade and the supply just about equals the demand; they can be bought at from 10 cents to 15 cents a bunch. A few carnations are seen in the stores, but their day is about past.

Growers of asters for the market report that the fields are looking fine, and everything points to one of the best seasons local growers have experienced. Last year Monroe county asters were shipped to the wholesale markets of New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and other large centers, but the demand in 1910 bids fair to tax the crop to the limit.

Various Notes.

Fred B. King, president of the Mandeville & King Co., seedsmen, left on Tuesday for a three weeks' trip up the Great Lakes and over the Georgian Bay district after big fish.

George B. Hart and family are enjoying a vacation at Stony lake, near Peterboro, Ont.

Chas. H. Vick was in Syracuse a part of last week arranging for an exhibition to be conducted by James Vick's Sons at the New York state fair. This exhibit will be asters and vegetables grown by customers of the house, and sixty-nine prizes, aggregating $1,040, have been offered by the firm. E. F. R.

We'll Help You Make Your Palm Department Pay.

Many florists neglect their Palm business because they think that other lines pay better. If you think that, we would like a chance to prove to you, by the experience and testimony of scores of our customers who have had long experience with Palms, and who therefore know, that few other departments of the retail florist's business can be made to show a steadier and more satisfactory profit than this one.

It's absolutely necessary, though, that you sell first-class stock, and this we are prepared to supply. Our Palms are all home-grown and are clean, vigorous and thrifty. We supply them in practically all the standard sizes and our prices are no higher than you would pay elsewhere, as the following list will show.

Our interest in our customers doesn't end with the filling of an order, either; florists who want to build up a better Palm business will find many helpful suggestions in our summer booklet, just off the press, which contains, also, our price list for the coming season.

We want you to have a copy of this booklet—we know it will interest you and help your Palm business. Drop us a postal now and we will see that a copy comes to you by next mail.

And, as decisive proof, why not let us have a trial order, if you're not already acquainted with "Heacock Quality"? Here are our prices; your instructions will have our best attention and the Palms will be shipped without delay.

GLEN COVE, N. Y.

The annual meeting of the Nassau County Horticultural Society took the form of an outing and was held at the Inside Inn, Oyster Bay, Wednesday, August 4. MILWAUKEE

The Market.

Market conditions have not changed much here since last report. The supply in general is not heavy, and there is sufficient demand, especially in funeral work, to keep the market pretty well cleaned up most of the time. The early outdoor cut flower crops are being handicapped by lack of rain; in fact, thus far it has been a typically dry summer, preceded by an unfavorable spring.

Various Notes.

We can again announce the opening of a new flower stand; namely, the Flora Bon, located on Third street, just north of Grand avenue. It is a flower and candy store combined, owned by Pasterino & Schiappacaesse, commission merchants, and managed by Dan Van Engel, who, judging from his first window display—a small pond with six little, yellow, live ducks, surrounded by moss and appropriate cut flowers—seems to know how to attract the attention of the passer-by.

The Milwaukee Gardeners' Association could not have wished for better weather July 31, when it held its fifth annual picnic and ball at Jones Grove, just north of the city limits, on the Green Bay road.

The announcement has been received of the engagement of Gust. Mueller to Miss Ruby Eisner. Mr. Mueller is the manager and grower for the Mueller & Schroeder Co., carnation specialists, a position which he has filled most satisfactorily.

With the return of Ed. Weber and the leaving of Tom Cassidy, the store force of the C. C. Pollworth Co. will soon be ready to settle down for the coming season's work.

Both the Holton & Hunkel Co. and the C. C. Pollworth Co. report having been sold out completely Sunday morning, July 31. At the Holton & Hunkel plant at Brown Deer the new concrete benches have been about completed in all the houses.

Among many other designs sent by James M. Fox & Son, July 24, to Menominee, Mich., was a casket cover, full length, made up of orchids and lily of the valley, and pronounced one of the finest ever turned out.

The national encampment of the Knights of Pythias was held in our city from August 1 to 10, and this induced some out-of-town florists to pay us a visit.

Chas. Menger's young son is nursing a broken arm, the result of an accident while summer-resorting with his parents.

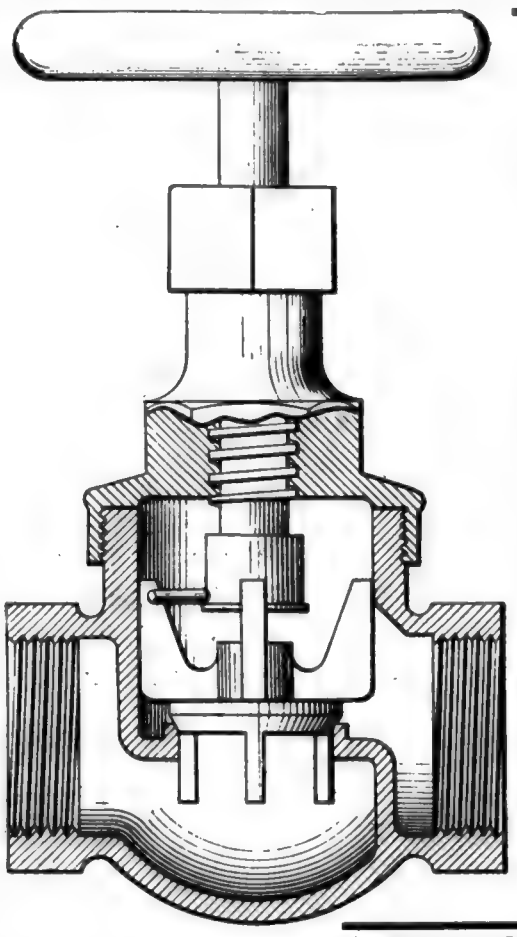
Greenhouse Heating.

Coal prices advanced 10 cents a ton August 1. There will be other advances. Why wait?

Wendland & Keimel, Elmhurst, Ill., gave an order August 4, to the Pocahontas Coal Sales Co., 277 Dearborn street, Chicago, for 400 tons of Pocahontas coal for immediate delivery.



The strike of the Illinois coal miners, not only is not settled, but looks to be even in a worse position than before. The miners' union president made a settlement with the operators, which the miners themselves promptly repudiated. It appears that the men will have to settle their differences among themselves before there is any chance of a settlement with the employers. In the meantime the production of coal is light, the season of active demand rapidly approaching and greenhouse owners should be getting busy stocking up.

CHANGING TO STEAM HEAT.

At present I have three connected houses, each 16x40 feet, running north and south. The whole of the present building, therefore, is 40x48 feet, with three feet of glass in the sides and five feet of glass in the gables. The rafters are nine feet long. The temperature needed in these houses is 50 to 55 degrees. I propose to build two more houses, running east from the present range. One of the new houses, the south one, will be 16x60 and will require a temperature of 65 degrees. The other new house, which is to be heated to 50 degrees, will be 16x30, with the boiler house at the outer end of it. The new houses will have 5-foot solid walls, boarded and lined on both sides.

The present houses are heated with hot water, but I wish hereafter to heat the whole range with steam, carrying a pressure of ten pounds or more. Four-inch pipe is now used as wall radiators, and the three houses contain, besides, a total of seven coils, each coil composed of seven 1½-inch pipes, thirty-seven feet long. Please state what changes I must make in the three houses and what piping is needed in the new ones. In this part of Iowa the temperature sometimes goes down to 30 degrees below zero. H. N. A.

To heat the present houses, 16x40 feet, to 55 degrees with steam, will require eight 1½-inch pipes in the middle house and nine in those having glass in the side walls.

Save Money by Using DAVIS' COMBINATION CHECK AND GLOBE VALVES
On Steam Heating Systems.

Better than any other check valve for any purposes, but especially adapted for use on pipes leading to steam boilers and from heating pipes to return pipe. The combination valve takes the place of two valves, a check value and a globe valve, and gives much better satisfaction, making simple and short connections, saving valves, nipples, labor and money.

Would You Save One-Quarter of Your Coal Bill?
INSTALL
A Kitts Improved Hydraulic Damper Regulator.

Florist Peter Crowe, Rose Place, Utica, N. Y., voluntarily writes:—

"I am very much pleased to let you know that the Damper Regulator I bought from you last fall is by far the best apparatus for greenhouse purposes. I had my book-keeper compare my coal bill of last with that of this year and I find a saving of one quarter the amount of this year's coal over last year's; also the past winter was a great deal colder and longer than the winter before.

"There is another very good feature about the Damper Regulator, as it keeps a uniform heat in all the houses at all times by putting on and shutting off pipes. And I find that my Roses and Ferns did far better this winter than any winter so far, as the temperature was so uniform at all times.

"My reason for writing you is to let you know, and also to thank you for bringing my attention to the Regulator, and I assure you I cannot speak too highly of this machine."

Are not facts like these worth an investigation?

For the proposed house, 16x60 feet, to be heated to 65 degrees, ten 1½-inch pipes will be required. In the new house, 16x30 feet, to be heated to 50 degrees, eight 1½-inch pipes would be sufficient. As the 4-inch pipes are on hand, there will be no serious objection to using them for the flows, although smaller pipe would answer in most cases.

STEAM FOR ENLARGED HOUSE.

I have two houses, each 20x52, which are heated with a Furman hot water boiler, No. 3,008. One of my houses is old, and I intend to tear it down, build it twice as wide and get the steam attachments. I have three 3-inch flow pipes in each house, and fifteen 2-inch returns in one and eighteen in the other. The returns are close under the benches, which are low. By placing the returns on the side wall and near the edge of the benches, would I not have enough radiation for the additional space? I have never had any trouble to keep the houses warm, and do not wish to change the size of my boiler. I am located in northern Ohio.

The house which the new one will join has a 3-foot wall, and I wish a 6½-foot wall on the other side. How steep a slant should the roof have? Could I have an even span, or will I need a longer slope on the low side? Are the building blocks all right for the side?

W. L. W.

As I understand the main part of the question, it is whether three 3-inch flows and fifteen or more 2-inch returns will heat the new house, 40x52 feet, using steam. There seems to be no difficulty whatever. In fact, the amount of radiation is more than is necessary, as a house of the size mentioned should be heated to 60 degrees with steam, using one 3-inch main and twelve 2-inch returns. It would be a mistake to use more than one main, and the returns should be reduced to the number mentioned. In case 1¼-inch pipe is used for the returns, twenty returns will be required.

Either the even-span or two-thirds-span roof can be used. If a building has a slope of 30 degrees, it answers fairly well. Hollow building blocks can be used to advantage for greenhouse walls. There is no reason why the longer slope of the roof should not be on the lower side.

OVER A MINE.

"The coal consumers of this country, especially of the middle west, and that includes a big percentage of the florists, are sleeping over a mine," said G. Golsen, of the Golsen-Doan Coal Co. "I don't mean a coal mine, but one of the volcanic kind."

"The production of coal in Illinois last year exceeded a million tons a week. This has been seriously interfered with for five months. Production in Iowa, in Indiana, in Ohio and in the eastern fields also has been cut down by labor troubles. The quantity of the fuel on top of the ground at this date is millions of tons less than at this date in any recent years.

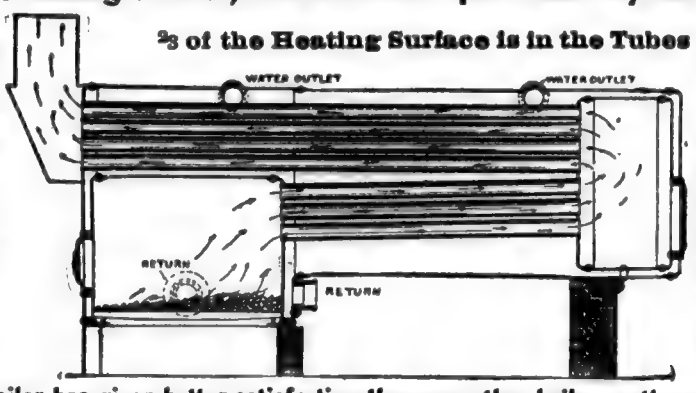
"The prospect is that it will be September 1 before anything like normal full capacity is reached by the mining interests of this country. Then will come the car shortage. There always is a winter shortage, and this year, with every one hollering for coal, the shortage is to be worse than usual.

"The best interests of the coal trade are not in high prices; we do not like to see wide fluctuations. Too high prices invariably mean a reaction and are followed by low prices—but we can see nothing in it except abnormally high prices for coal this winter.

"It is an old saying that delays are dangerous. You can tell all the florists that delays are more dangerous this season than they ever were before. They ought to buy their coal and get it on the place as speedily as possible."

TWO MICHIGAN HOUSES.

Will you please inform me how to pipe my two connected houses for hot water? The houses run east and west. House No. 1 is 20½x92 feet, and eleven feet to the ridge. It is to be used for general stock, such as bedding plants, mums and miscellaneous plants. House No. 2, for carnations, is 14x84 feet and has three feet of glass in the south wall, which is seven feet to the gutter. I have a Kroeschell No. 1 boiler, located in the northwest corner of house No. 1. The top of the boiler is three feet down.



I have an old house, ninety-two feet long, which is piped as follows: One 3-inch flow along the purlin to the east end, where it is divided into 2-inch returns. Two of these returns are under the north bench, three alongside the second bench and three alongside the third bench, with four 3-inch returns under the south bench of a lean-to. This has given good results. The three 2-inch returns along the second bench were not used all last winter. All returns are controlled by valves, with one air cock on the west end of the 3-inch flow, which is also the highest point of the system. I also have one 2-inch flow and one 2-inch return running under the north bench to the dwelling house, but I will have to make it larger.

The boiler, as I said, is located in the northwest corner of house No. 1, where there is also a potting shed. The boiler has two 4-inch flow openings and two 4-inch return openings. The top of the boiler is about three feet below the lowest returns. The expansion tank is located in the garret and is connected with the boiler at the lowest point, where the return enters the boiler. House No. 1 is sheltered on the east by the dwelling and on the west by the boiler and potting shed. House No. 2 is sheltered on the east by the office and on the west by the potting shed, except about five feet of the west end gable, which is glass. M. J. B.

The arrangement of piping now in the old house, as described, should give good results, and a similar plan of piping houses No. 1 and No. 2 could be used. In house No. 1, use a 2½-inch flow on the exposed wall, with two 2-inch returns under the side bench; on the purlin run another flow and with it carry four returns, under the benches. Then on the connecting wall place a flow near the gutter, with six returns on the wall underneath. On the outer wall of house No. 2, run one 2½-inch flow and four 2-inch returns.

This should maintain a temperature of 60 degrees in house No. 1 and 50 to 55 degrees in house No. 2.

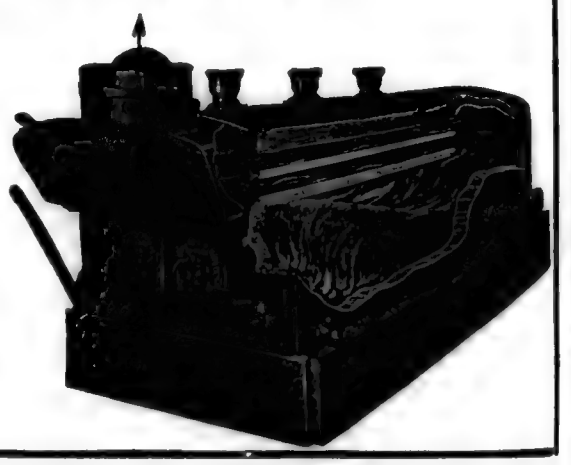
YONKERS, N. Y.

The regular monthly meeting of the Yonkers Horticultural Society was held in Wiggin's hall, Friday evening, August 5, with a good attendance. The committee in charge of the June show reported that practically all the business of the show was now completed and that a substantial balance remained from the proceeds, after all expenses had been paid.

The schedule for the fall show was adopted. It contains a total of sixty-one classes, and will be printed for distribution soon. A large number of prizes for these exhibits has been received from various sources, but more will be welcome. The donations have included silver cups, gold medals and several cash prizes.



Hamilton Scott was elected secretary to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of W. H. Waite, who has been in poor health for some time and is taking a trip to Scotland to recuperate. It is hoped that he will return with health greatly improved.

Rochester, N. H.—E. A. Corson has been making preparations for the building of another greenhouse.

Atlanta, Ga.—The Atlanta Floral Co. recently had an attractive and realistic window decoration, containing a rugged little piece of scenery constructed of rocks, with ferns and plants growing on them, while nearby was a small pond, in which miniature figures of children were diving and swimming.

Washington Court House, O.—For some little time the work of removing the two large greenhouses from Washington avenue to the grounds owned by Robert Buck & Co., on North street, where the Washington Floral Gardens have been located for many years, has been going forward, and within the next ten days the two buildings will be completed. The two buildings have been enlarged, and for a time will be devoted to carnations. Next year they will probably be used for roses.

"A PERFECT GREENHOUSE HOSE"

FURNISHED in continuous lengths of 500 feet. An exceptionally high grade hose manufactured with a woven jacket insertion instead of cotton duck, and with specially selected rubber in the inner tube and cover.

The woven jacket construction makes a stronger hose than can be obtained from cotton duck, and absolutely precludes the possibility of cover opening at seam—a common cause of failure of hose made on cotton duck. This construction also gives a more flexible hose and reduces the possibility of kinking.

"Magic" Hose is guaranteed to stand a pressure of 500 pounds per square inch, although its bursting pressure is far in excess of this.

The Market.

Continued quiet prevails in florists' circles. Stock is scarce again; carnations are few and far between, and only some asters, which are grown indoors, are of much account. There has been quite a little funeral work, and it has been necessary to hustle for something to use.

Various Notes.

Preparations are being made for space at the state fair in September. The prospects are for a much better display, and the prizes are this year worth competing for.

Emil Olson, formerly with the Lakewood Cemetery Association, is now with the Minneapolis Floral Co., in charge of the packing department.

Art Rice had a bad fall a week ago, dislocating his arm, and he suffered a great deal from the results, though the injury is now healing.

The Market.

Trade has been good recently, for this time of the year, with a good demand for all kinds of flowers for funeral work. There was a shortage for a few days, when carnations went to the bad and asters were not being cut in any quantity. Roses were also in short supply, but this condition did not last long.

Asters have lately been coming in by the carload, and it has been a question what to do with them. Plenty of Japanese lilies, valley, gladioli, sweet peas, etc., were also received daily and met with a fair demand.

Various Notes

DENVER, COLO.

The Market.

Business for the last two weeks has been unusually dull, owing partly to the scarcity of stock; there are no roses to speak of and the few that come in are small and open almost too quickly to sell. Carnations are in the same boat; most of the growers have thrown out the old plants and what few new ones arrive are small and short stemmed; in fact, almost unsalable. Work for a few funerals is about all there is to do—and at that it takes some hustling to find enough stock to make a design. Sweet peas are even poorer and asters, although just coming in, are away below par, owing, no doubt, to the hot and dry weather. Take it all in all, dealers say flowers never were so scarce during the months of July and August as this year.

Various Notes.

Miss Helen Rudd, of Chicago, has been spending a month or so with Mr. and Mrs. Valentine.

B. E. Gillis has returned from his vacation at Pitkin and Colorado Springs.

The office of the Park Floral Co., at 1706 Broadway, was broken into Wednesday morning, August 3, by burglars, and between $50 and $100 was secured. They also took a gold watch belonging to Miss G. E. Page, the secretary of the company. Nitroglycerine was used, the explosion being heard by employees of the Shirley and Savoy hotels. The robbers blew off the doors of the safe and, removing the strong box deposited inside, carried it to the basement, where they blew it open. The company will lose nothing, however, as it was fully protected by burglary insurance.

Only a few expect to attend the convention at Rochester. J. A. Valentine, of course, will go, and Mr. Root, of the Barteldes Seed Co., as well as E. S. Kennedy, of the Alpha Floral Co., expect to attend, and there may be others.

E. S. K.

Danvers, Mass. — Ettore Tassinari, gardener at the Danvers State Hospital, has increased the area covered by the flower beds this season, and the arrangement of the beds is even more beautiful and elaborate than usual. Among the designs on the grounds are a large horse, a girl in a swing, an American eagle and a Maltese cross. The plants used are all grown in the hospital greenhouses, which have been in charge of Mr. Tassinari for thirty years.

We Are Going To The Convention This Year And Exhibit

FOR several years we have not exhibited at the S. A. F. Convention—got out of the way somehow, and every summer when August came around we have been so head over heels with work that we couldn't seem to squeeze in anything extra. But things are pacing up faster with us now, and we have reached the place where the more we have to do, the more we seem able to do. You know how it is—the busier you are, the more time you have to be busy.

WE have not engaged the biggest space in the hall, nor are we going to make a big splurge, burn red fire or serve cold tea and pretzels, but in our Exhibit you will find some pointed pointers about heating. The kind of pointers that save you money—and profanity.

THE manager of the Material Department promises to make a good showing—and he keeps his promises. The wide house and the EXTRA WIDE HOUSE, are coming in for their share. We have something to say and show on the subject, that will make you straighten right up and take notice. A New Kink in Ventilation will surely interest you.

OUR "trouble man" will be there (brogue and all), to talk on heating with you, and the Material and Construction Departments will be represented BY MEN WHO KNOW. Come around and shake hands with us, and keep acquainted or get acquainted as the case may be.

An Urgent Invitation and a Hearty Welcome

Next week's the Convention; the week when you and I and the rest of the faithful will put on our glad rags, and go to Rochester to find out what the other fellow is doing. And he's doing things, you can depend on that. Doing things that you can't afford not to be wise to. Incidentally, he wants to know what you have been up to in the past year. So be prepared to give an account of yourself.

After you have shaken hands all around with the boys, look up our Exhibit; it will be the next best thing to do. You will find several of our representatives there, with Exhibits from the Heating Department, the Material Department and the Iron Frame Department.

They know their business, every one of them, and are ready for business any two minutes you are. But one thing you can depend on, you won't be urged to buy a dollar's worth. If you should, however, so far forget yourself as to blow in some of your good money, it will be a pleasant thing for the boys to write about to the Home Office.

We would like to have written every mother's son of you a special invitation, and put it in Uncle Sam's hands for delivery, but you have grown to be such a big family now, that it is out of the question.

So consider this an urgent invitation and a right down hearty welcome to our Exhibit.

Come around and make yourself at home. You will find things comfortable there, place to sit down—interesting catalogs and papers to read.

"FORMOSAS" IN OSHIMA.

This illustration is from a photo taken in June this year, showing part of a lily field located on the hills above the town of Vase, the chief seaport of the island.

Horseshoe Brand Products

The word "Formosa" applied to lily bulbs is misleading, because the bulbs commonly sold as such do not come from Formosa at all, but from the island of Oshima, located south of Japan. The bulbs planted there have done fairly well, especially in the sizes 6 to 8 and 7 to 9, and it is likely the quality will improve somewhat when the various varieties are separated and cultivated with the same care exercised by good growers in Japan.

Lilies are also grown in the experimental stage in other islands still farther south, toward the equator, and some of them are superior to the best of Giganteum, bulbs size 7 to 9 producing in the fields from 12 to 20 flowers.

A FIELD OF "FORMOSAS."

While not planted so uniformly and carefully, the lilies show a strong growth and freedom from disease. Mr. Seitaro Arai stands in the foreground, holding a "Formosa" Giganteum, which has a black stem clear to the top, and which he brought from another field for comparison. From a photo taken in June this year.

Mr. Seitaro Arai, who supplies the Horseshoe Brand, with five assistants, visited the southern islands in May and June, some of which are uninhabited, with a view of selecting and securing such bulbs as will be of good value to growers who demand the best the market will afford, and a credit to the name under which these bulbs are marketed.

We have a few cases of bulbs ready for delivery, which have just arrived from various southern islands, and which are reported of extra fine quality. You can also have the common so-called "Formosas" from Oshima—they are ready for shipment now. Write us if you want good lily bulbs.

Minneapolis Floral Company
Green Houses

Minneapolis, Minn. July 8, 1910.

Gentlemen:-

We do not hesitate to recommend the wonder-working powers of Evergreen Brand Fertilizer, having used it extensively on all stock, particularly lams, and having found it especially adapted to lilies.

Very truly yours,
Minneapolis Floral Co.

January 10, 1910.

Gentlemen:-

Regarding the merits of Evergreen Brand Fertilizer, we used some of this on our putting greens at the Evanston Golf Club with excellent results. I consider it the best fertilizer for this purpose that I have ever come across.

Yours very truly,
F. C. STILES,
Chairman Greens Committee.

JOHN RITZI & SON
FLORISTS

Greencastle, Ind., June 28, 1910.

Gentlemen:-

We wish to say that we used some of your Evergreen Brand Fertilizer and find it all right. We used some of it on our roses and carnations and they gave us fine flowers with good stems.

As we plan using this extensively, we should like to know what prices you make on quantities.

Very truly yours,
John Ritzi & Son.

Evergreen

Every grower, retail florist, seed merchant, nurseryman, landscape gardener, jobber and wholesaler should investigate the possibilities of making money through the use or sale of this article—now ordered in ton lots by some of the largest and most successful growers.

CUT FLOWERS

Headquarters for Quality, Variety, Quantity

If you are a buyer of Cut Flowers in the Chicago market, and have not previously bought of us, our mutual interests require that you should order here. Our big outlet brings us stock of all kinds in quantity, and our enormous facilities give our customers assurance they could not have in ordering where supplies are less great or varied. We handle the largest orders coming into this market, but don't hold off because your needs are small—we like to help the orders grow.

ASTERS! ASTERS!!

We now have large daily supplies of Asters—we believe it is not overstating the facts to say we have larger quantity than any other house in the west and that the supply includes the best Asters to be had. Special fancy, $3.00 to $4.00; select, at $2.00 to $3.00 per 100. Plenty of the common kind, at $1.00 to $1.50 per 100.

KILLARNEY and WHITE KILLARNEY

The quality of our Killarney is widely known—we do a very large shipping business in these all the year around. The present supply is from plants grown specially for a summer crop—there are no finer roses now on this market, and few so good.

Also good Beauty, My Maryland, Kaiserin.

ORCHIDS

We are headquarters for prize-winning Orchids. Cattleyas usually in stock awaiting your orders, but can supply any variety in season if given 36 hours' notice.

LILIES

Easter Lilies and Auratums in daily supply all summer; $1.50 per dozen.

GLADIOLI

All colors in quantity.

VALLEY

Fancy Valley always on hand.

HARDY CUT FERNS

We want your regular orders for Fancy Ferns because we have the best in the country, now and always—nothing less than the best will do for our trade.

REVERO HOSE

The kind that won't kink, crack or peel, ¾-inch, 17 cents per foot; in 500-foot reels, 16 cents per foot.

INSECTICIDES

We handle them all at manufacturers' prices. Order the one you like best, and you get it—we play no favorites, never substitute. We handle all kinds in such large quantities that you always get fresh stock when you order here—none of them ever stay long on our shelves.

Gentlemen:-

I have used many different kinds of fertilizers, both in the greenhouses and on the lawns, but your Evergreen Brand Fertilizer is the best of them all when it comes down to the actual test.

Your fertilizer has made, from a corner that gets little sunlight and consequently a sour and stagnant soil, one of the best pieces of the lawn at the factory.

Very truly yours,

Fertilizer

Try a sample 12 lb. can, $2.00; 100 lb. drum, $16.00. As useful on the lawn and garden as under glass—a fine side line for retailers. We have arranged to make a Special proposition to Seedsmen and Jobbers. Write for full information.

FLORISTS' SUPPLIES MANUFACTURERS' PRICES

We manufacture many lines of florists' supplies, either in our own big building or elsewhere, and all others we handle in such large quantity that we can make our modest profit selling at the prices manufacturers charge smaller buyers. In no case do we permit ourselves to be undersold. The greater part of our business being mail orders for a general line of supplies, we are in a position to defy price competition on the same grade of goods. Outside of price, buyers will appreciate their many advantages in placing their orders all in one place—saving in time, bother and express. We carry so large a stock we can at all times fill all orders promptly.

RIBBONS AND CHIFFONS

Buying our Ribbons in loom orders means that we must carry an immense stock, but it also means that we get special florists' qualities (not department store stock) at a cost that makes it possible for us to sell at the same prices smaller jobbers pay the mills. We have every flower shade in every width and several grades of silk, satin taffeta, mousselines, moire, plain taffeta and satin gros grain. A complete range of price and qualities; there's nothing in Ribbons we can't supply. Full 10-yd. bolts. A good many florists "sit up and take notice" when they begin to compare our Ribbons and Chiffons and our Prices, with the goods they have been getting and the prices they have been paying.

Send us a trial order—for a few bolts of the ribbon you use most, or for the kinds you are short of.

Or send us samples of your ribbons and get our prices on same qualities.
Or ask us for samples from our line, with prices.

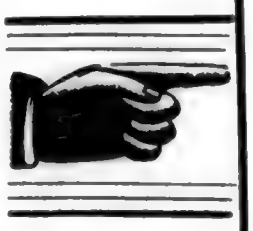
CUT FLOWER AND DESIGN BOXES

We handle so large a line of Cut Flower, Design, Violet and Corrugated Boxes that it would take this entire two-page advertisement to describe and price them all. We believe it is the largest line handled by any one house in America and we know that for quality and price there is nothing to compare with it. About every florist who has looked at our line has recognized that we were offering him "a better box for the same money, or the same box for less money."

Send us one of the boxes you now use and get our prices on that quality.

We are originators of exclusive styles in Florists' Boxes. For large buyers we can get up a line of Boxes that will be exclusive with them—no one else will have a box like it.

Write us for our Special Proposition on a year's supply of our beautiful Fern Green Felt and White Enamel Boxes. How many do you use?



TO USERS OF CORRUGATED BOXES

Everybody is using Corrugated Fiber Board Boxes. Growers save money by shipping to market in them and Retailers use them for designs. We handle by the carload. We suggest that our patrons take advantage of the prices quoted below and order now, as it is only a question of a very short time when the prices on corrugated boxes will materially advance.

For The RETAILER

for the business of an up-to-date Retail Flower Store—not here in this list, for it is not possible to mention more than a few specialties; but here in our store is a complete line of all seasonable Cut Flowers and the best selection of up-to-date Supplies—an assortment that leaves nothing out. Visitors to Chicago should not fail to inspect our permanent display in dust-proof, glass-walled sample rooms.

Cut Flowers

We are the Pioneer Cut Flower House of the Chicago market—at it continucusly since 1878. We have seen the business at Chicago grow from its very small beginning to its present wonderful proportions. This House pointed out the way, and all through the years we have kept in step with the march of progress. Our facilities have been developed as the needs of the business increased. We probably have today on our list of buyers—we cater specially to the shipping trade—more names than any other house in this country, but our facilities will be found equal to the call of another increase in business this fall.

ASTERS

Our Asters are in a class by themselves. This extra fancy stock comes from an Aster specialist who has for years been working up his private strains until we know of nothing to compare with them—year after year the buyers find these the fanciest, largest, longest-stemmed Asters in the market.

Can also supply the standard grade of Asters in any quantity at market rates.

GLADIOLI

Buyers will find here large supplies of Gladioli of the right colors—America, pink; Augusta, white; Mrs. Francis King, red.

SUMMER ROSES

You can order Roses of us and be sure you will get the best stock the market affords. Specially strong on Killarney, the best summer rose.

GREENS

Greens are a leading specialty, all the year around. Order of us—now and all the time.

Supplies

There simply isn't a thing in the line of Retail Store Requisites we haven't got. Order and we will make prompt shipment.

WIRE WORK

We have made Wire Work for more than a quarter of a century. In all the years we never have been undersold, though we sell our Wire Work on the basis of quality, not price. Place order now for fall needs.

RIBBONS and CHIFFON

We do not deal in job-lot Ribbons. Our stock is carefully selected. It includes all the Ribbons florists use, but it does not include any off shades or off qualities, such as are invariably taken on by houses that handle the job-lots sold cheaply by mills at the end of a season. Buyers ordering of us will get the same Ribbon, same width, same quality, same color, on every order. Hundreds of buyers have found it's the most satisfactory way.

BASKETS

If we were to undertake to show our line of Baskets, our travelers would have to carry a carload of samples. The only way is for buyers to visit our sample room or to order an assortment.

We put up assortments at $2.50, $4, $5, $7.50, $10 and $25. Every piece in every assortment is clean, fresh, salable stock—you can return any that don't suit.

DOVES

Every retailer uses Doves. You may be told they are scarce, but Hunt's source of supply never fails.

FLORISTS' LETTERS

What is your favorite Letter? We have it, also all the others. We carry in stock continuously a full line of every Letter on the market.

MOSS

Order Sphagnum and Sheet Moss of us and get the best, cleanest stock, carefully selected for uniform high quality.

GREENHOUSE

Specialties—For The Grower

We do an immense business in Greenhouse Specialties, because our list has been selected through many years of experience on the basis of best quality and best service, price being a secondary consideration—but it is a fact that on these specialties of superior merit we often are able to make prices actually lower than are charged by others for articles used for similar purposes, but manufactured without consideration for the special needs of the greenhouse trade.

FERTILIZERS

There is as much difference in Fertilizers as there is between night and day. Growers who buy without considering the guaranteed analysis are buying in the dark; perhaps they get the plant food they pay for, but the chances are they don't. Send for our special Fertilizer Catalogue, containing guaranteed analyses on a full line of florists' Fertilizers.

Bone Meal, per ton, $30.
Bone Flour, per ton, $32.
Blood and Bone, per ton, $31.
Sheep Manure, per ton, $18.
Dried Blood, Nitrate of Soda, Pulverized Cattle Manure, Shredded Cattle Manure and all other florists' Fertilizers.

"ELASTIC-LYKE"
Greenhouse Glazing Putty.

Absolutely the best glazing product ever produced. Guaranteed to be of purest double boiled linseed oil and to contain a greater proportion of pure white lead than any other product. Can be used in machine or putty bulb. Impervious to water and will not heave in cold nor run in warm weather.

One gallon, $1.30. Ten gallons, $12.50.
Five gallons, $6.35. Twenty gallons, $24.50.
One barrel, 50 gallons, $60.

HUNT'S GLAZING BRADS.

These are the best articles for the purpose. Per pound, 10c; per 100 pounds, $9.

HUNT'S GREENHOUSE WHITE PAINT.

Every grower knows what an immense difference there is in the wearing quality of paint. Eventually every grower will come to know that Hunt's Greenhouse White Paint outwears any other paint under the severe conditions in a greenhouse. If you don't know this to be the fact, now is the time to prove it for yourself.

One gallon, $1.60. Ten gallons, $15.25.
Five gallons, $7.75. Twenty-five gallons, $37.50.
One barrel (50 gallons), $70.

NOXALL HOSE.

Noxall is our own private brand of rubber hose; Hunt's name appears on every length. It is natural to suppose that we would not put our name on any other hose than the best that can be had for the price, and, we believe, the best hose on the market for greenhouse use.

To-Bak-Ine Products

Not the Cheapest, but the Best.

"Send me 20 gallons of To-Bak-Ine Liquid. I have been trying out ——— again, as they claim so strongly that they are making a strictly No. 1 article now and the price is lower than for To-Bak-Ine, but after trying three gallons, part said to be 40 per cent and part 50 per cent, we find that it spots and burns pink roses and carnations, so no more of it for me at any price. I will stick to To-Bak-Ine in future." Glad to supply the writer's name and other testimonials on request.

To-Bak-Ine Liquid—¼ pint, 60c; ½ pint, $1.10; 1 pint, $2.00; ½ gal., $7.75; 1 gal., $15.00; 5 gals., $67.50. Write for prices on 10, 20, 40 gal. casks with locked faucet and for complete spraying directions and other information.

To-Bak-Ine Powder—50 lb. bag, $1.50; 100 lb. bag, $3.00.

Send for "Words of Wisdom" booklet; it's free and it tells all about fumigating.

CONCRETE BENCHES. Wittbold Patent.

With the use of the Wittbold patented clamps and leg molds indestructible concrete benches can be built so easily and at such small cost that they are well worth investigation by every grower who has the least desire to save the cost (and hard work) of bench renewal. Write for special Bench Booklet; it tells all about cost, etc., with illustrated directions how to build best benches easiest.

The Florists' Supply House of America

WON HIGHEST PRAISE

Every delegate to the S. A. F. Convention held at Rochester, N. Y., August 16, 17 and 18, voted that our magnificent exhibit was the finest collection of florists' supplies brought together.

It did not matter whether the delegate came from north, east, south or west, he or she was quick to recognize the well known Bayersdorfer standard of excellence in the entire exhibit.

Not only was there quality shown, but quantity and judgment in selection to interest everybody; the supplies demanded by the masses were there side by side with the bon-ton novelties for the smart set.

There could be no question that the popular vote gave to the Bayersdorfer exhibit the highest award in the gift of the people.

Everything was there to suit the purpose for which it was made with a skill that was amazing; no make-shifts, no poor contrivance, each article filling perfectly the place intended.

"The best of everything in florists' supplies," that describes our exhibit; it has taken years of hard work to reach this point. We are there now and mean to keep ahead of the times by offering you better and better supplies each succeeding season.

With every good wish, we remain,

Yours to command,

Imagine Yourself as the Proud Owner of an

ARMLEDER WAGON

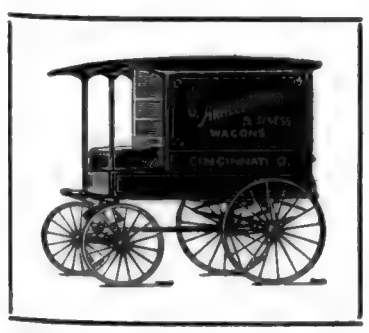
YOU know you would be proud of it, don't you? You simply couldn't help it, because it is human nature to feel elated over the possession and ownership of anything that is strictly modern and up-to-date, and above all, a credit to the owner. Yes—and the Armleder Wagons are all of that. If you don't believe it, ask your nearest florist friend who owns one. They all feel the same about it—just as is shown by this clipping from a newspaper in a town where we recently delivered one of these wagons.

...in connection ... and will give great ... aid in supplying the stock for ... retail trade.

Randolph, Vt.—H. M. Totman's greenhouses, says a local newspaper, have blossomed out with a handsome new delivery wagon, made by the O. Armleder Co., of Cincinnati, O. "The enclosed body of the vehicle," the paper continues, "has a glossy black finish, with gilt lettering which gives the name of the proprietor and the greenhouse products of flowers, seeds, plants and shrubs. Besides double doors at the rear, there are doors back of the driver's seat, which enable him to reach the interior without alighting from the wagon, and the running gear, painted red, turns around like a top. The gray horse-power in front wears an elegant gold plated, monogram harness."

From the Florists' Review May 26, 1910

Besides, you won't have to worry all the time for fear of a breakdown. If your wagon is an Armleder, you know it is made by experts (we have been in the business for twenty-eight years), and that means that it will greatly outwear any ordinary wagon, built by someone with less experience.



Of Course, You Want an Armleder.

But you are wondering if it isn't going to cost an awful lot. Never fear, we make so many wagons each year that we only need a small margin of profit; we sell them direct to you, so you get factory prices; moreover we have over one hundred styles. Isn't that plenty to select from? Now is the time to place your order to be ready for the winter.

A little better quality at a little lower price—THAT'S US : :

You need our 100 page Catalogue, showing 94 styles in over 300 sizes. It's free, but you'll have to ask for it.

THE ROCHESTER CONVENTION

TWENTY-SIXTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

THE NEXT MEETING WILL BE HELD AT BALTIMORE.

OFFICERS FOR 1911:

President, GEORGE ASMUS, Chicago, Ill.
Vice-president, R. VINCENT, Jr., White Marsh, Md.
Secretary, H. B. DORNER, Urbana, Ill.
Treasurer, WM. F. KASTING, Buffalo, N. Y.

Rochester has been an extremely busy city this week. Its Convention hall has been full and running over; its hotels have been full, and also running over, and its people have been full—of interest and hospitality, for the S. A. F. means more to Rochester than it does to many cities. Rochester is known as the Flower City; its nursery interests are greater than those of any other city in the United States, and probably in no other town in America, no matter what its size, does a greater proportion of the people come into close personal acquaintance with the interests which go to make up the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists. So Rochester was glad to be full—full of florists.

All that could have been asked of Rochester was a little more room—a little more room in Convention hall, a building that Rochester thinks quite sizable, but the aisles became decidedly congested when the crowds got in—and a few more rooms in the hotel officially selected as headquarters; hardly anyone got in there unless he had spoken in advance for his accommodations.

But it was a great convention—the greatest ever. The way the east turned out was an inspiration—to candidates as well as officers and the west. Boston and New England came with a delegation of over seventy people, and New York city's special train carried the largest party the metropolis ever has sent to a convention—the way they lined up at the clerk's desk at the Seneca hotel Monday evening reminded one of the box office at the Polo grounds when the Cubs are about to claw the Giants. New York, floriculturally as well as in many things otherwise, is the greatest state in the Union, and the attendance of up-state florists was extremely large, and Philadelphia and Pennsylvania were heavily represented. The regulars met many new faces; as usual, the bulk of the attendance was from a radius of two or three hundred miles, and the west was far outnumbered. Chicago had a good representation; Milwaukee sent a fine delegation, and Cincinnati showed up well, but otherwise the western representation was scattering; there was one man from San Francisco, two from Denver, one from Winnipeg and several from St. Louis, but from beyond the Mississippi not many.

The Rochester people had looked to the minutest details, so naturally had arranged with the weather man for cool, pleasant nights even if the days were a little bit warm, as becomes August, but nothing in the week's weather to encourage the idea of abandoning the summer meeting date.

The business sessions were held in a hall adjoining the exhibition, and proved exceptionally interesting. The society is just now passing through a period of important change. The tendency to split up into separate societies with many meetings has run its course to the usual extreme, and amalgamation is now the order of the day; everybody talks it and, apparently, everybody wants it. Also, a number of changes in the form of organization seemed ripe and were thrashed out at this meeting in connection with the proposal to change the date of the annual meeting. President Pierson made a splendid presiding officer, having had wide experience in the work in other bodies of which he is a member. He is mayor of Tarrytown and also president of the school board there.

Opening Session.

The first business session of the convention was called to order with commendable promptness on Tuesday afternoon, August 16, by F. W. Vick, president of the Rochester Florists' Club. The attendance was not large, although the hall was cool and comfortable. Mr. Vick introduced Mayor H. H. Edgerton, who made a two-minute talk of welcome. There was no rhetorical flub-dub about it, but its sincerity and good taste were evident. Following His Honor, Mr. Vick introduced George Deitrich, president of the Chamber of Commerce. He has a thorough acquaintance with the trade interests in his city, and spoke entertainingly of trade history.

In his response to the double welcome, Robert Craig made recognition of the work of Messrs. Barry and Ellwanger and said that, though the society has this week brought to Rochester some fine examples of the plant growers' art, there is much in Rochester to interest every man in the trade, especially in spring, and he hoped to see the S. A. F. return to the city for a spring meeting.

Patrick O'Mara gained the floor to present to President Pierson an ivory gavel as a token of the high regard in which he is held by his fellow members in the New York Florists' Club. Mr. Pierson evidently was taken entirely by surprise, but expressed his appreciation in a few well-chosen words, and then proceeded to read his annual address.

Though President Pierson has been an exceedingly busy man this summer, he evidently had given the future of the society much serious, close consideration. While his suggestions as to the affiliation of the special flower societies presented some wholly new ideas, and his thought with regard to the semi-annual meetings was equally original, the more the members mulled them over the better they liked them. The paper is printed in full on another page. Close attention was given to every word, and at the close of its reading there was an outburst of applause that showed that the effort put into the preparation of the document was fully appreciated.

Secretary H. B. Dorner presented a report of the year's work of his office. It showed steady progress, and is printed in full in this issue. Minutes of the meetings of the executive board were read and approved.

Treasurer W. F. Kasting presented the year's financial record, also printed on a following page. C. L. Washburn, A. L. Miller and Joseph Heacock were appointed as an auditing committee.

W. B. Du Rie, F. H. Traendly and B. Hammond were appointed to consider the reports of the state vice-presidents, which were voluminous and not read to the convention.

J. J. Davis presented a lengthy report on behalf of Dr. S. A. Forbes, the official entomologist of the society. He did not read it all, as it will appear in full in the society's annual volume.

P. O'Mara presented, and read sketchily, the correspondence between himself and other members of the committee on tariff and legislation, especially with reference to a resolution of the board of directors instructing the investigation of the causes of the high price of glass. The correspondence was voluminous, but led to the conclusion that no facilities within the command of the committee could be effective in grappling with so large a problem as the glass situation presents.

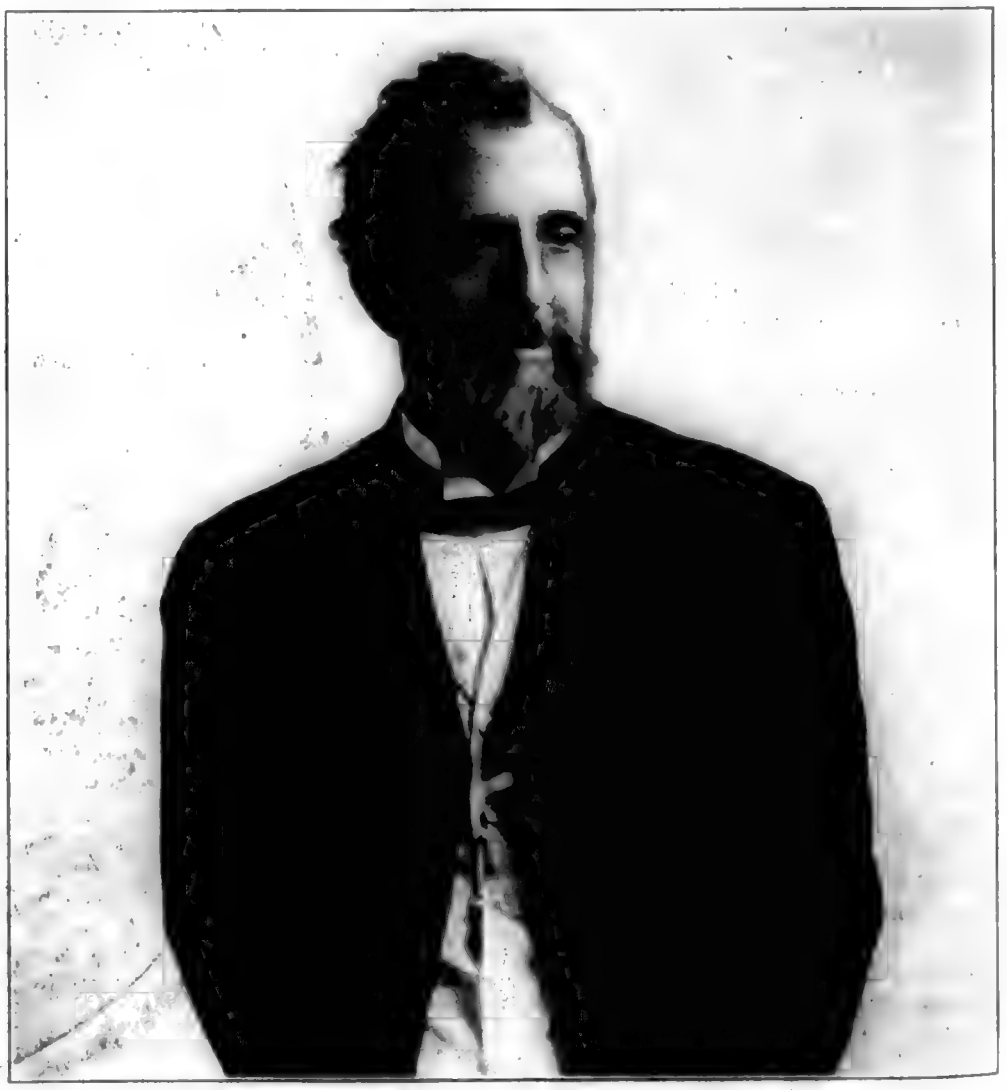
Because of increasing heat and diminishing attendance, there was an early adjournment.

President's Reception.

The annual reception to the president, which always has been the chief social event of the convention, was this year a notable success. Held in the big ballroom of the fine new Seneca hotel, there was abundant room, although the attendance was large. The ladies were excused from duty in the receiving line, but in the extension of the fraternal glad hand President Pierson had the assistance of President Vick, of the Rochester Florists' Club; venerable William R. Smith, of Washington; Adam Graham, of Cleveland; Robert Craig, whose smile is perennial; J. Otto Thilow, who seems to know all about every man in the trade, even if he never saw him before, and James Dean, whose hair now is white as snow, but who has lost none of his youthful enjoyment of such occasions.

Following the reception, refreshments were served by the skilled employees of the hotel, and a fine orchestra made music by which the young folks, and some of the older ones, danced till midnight. Those who thought the attendance of ladies lighter this year than some other years were surprised at the attendance at the reception, although, of course, the visiting ladies were there reinforced by the ladies of the Rochester members of the horticultural trades.

Wednesday's Session.



Wednesday opened cool and cloudy, delightful convention weather, but a multiplicity of interests prevented a large attendance at the opening of the business session. Those present were the wheel-horses, the workers, and the work of the society was put through expeditiously. The attendance increased as the morning passed, those dropping in finding their attention closely held.

At the opening Secretary Dorner made a report of the accessions to membership since the date of his report, August 10, when there were 825 members in good standing. Since then sixty-two had paid up and 180 new members had been admitted, making a total of 1,067 members, against a best previous record of 995—for the first time the society has over 1,000 paid-up members.

Edward D. Boyer, of Northampton, Pa., read a paper, "Use of Cement with Special Reference to Greenhouse Construction." Mr. Boyer is a cement expert, but his paper was not technical; he treated the subject from the point of view of the outsider and did not profess expert knowledge of greenhouse problems, inviting questions from the growers.

J. A. Peterson said he used coal ash screenings; coke ash screenings were used for benches and gave good drainage, using one to seven. Mr. Boyer said such a bench would not be permanent; he wanted a more dense mixture. Mr. Peterson said a one to four mixture did not give enough porosity, no matter how many drainage holes were left. Mr. Boyer said concrete does not become completely set, like stone, till seven years have passed.

E. H. Cushman asked for instructions on mixing. Mr. Boyer said the use of too much water is as bad as too little. He said a consistency like mortar is best. In reply to a question by W. A. Christy, he recommended chicken wire for reinforcing. A. Farenwald said that with ashes the reinforcing material does not last. Mr. Boyer said this is because of the sulphur in the coal ash; the ashes should be washed. In reply to John H. Dunlop, he said the sulphur in anthracite is not so great as in anthracite ashes, but still is there. Replying to J. A. Freeman, J. A. Peterson said he used fine ashes for outside walls and coarse ashes for benches. Mr. Freeman said he thought condensation on the inside of concrete greenhouse walls is a disadvantage.

John Birnie said he knew growers who found concrete benches much slower than wood. E. H. Cushman and Frank Holton said they had found the concrete benches quicker than wood. Mr. Farenwald said porosity is the great advantage of concrete benches for roses. Replying to S. N. Peck, I. L. Powell said experience showed fungus does not breed in concrete. H. H. Whetzel said it would be impossible. Chas. Weber said he grew his best stock in concrete benches. Mr. Barry knew of concrete benches 33 years old that had no fungus.

Replying to Mr. Pierson, Mr. Boyer said where long walls are built in one piece provision for expansion might be made with pitch or asphalt; the expansion of concrete and iron is equal, he said, but he does not consider the expansion of concrete an important point.

August Poehlmann described the concrete benches in use at Morton Grove. He found no difference in growth on concrete or wood and little difference in water required.

There were many further comments and notes on experience, indicating that practically every grower present is using concrete and that the interest in the subject is universal.

Baltimore Next.

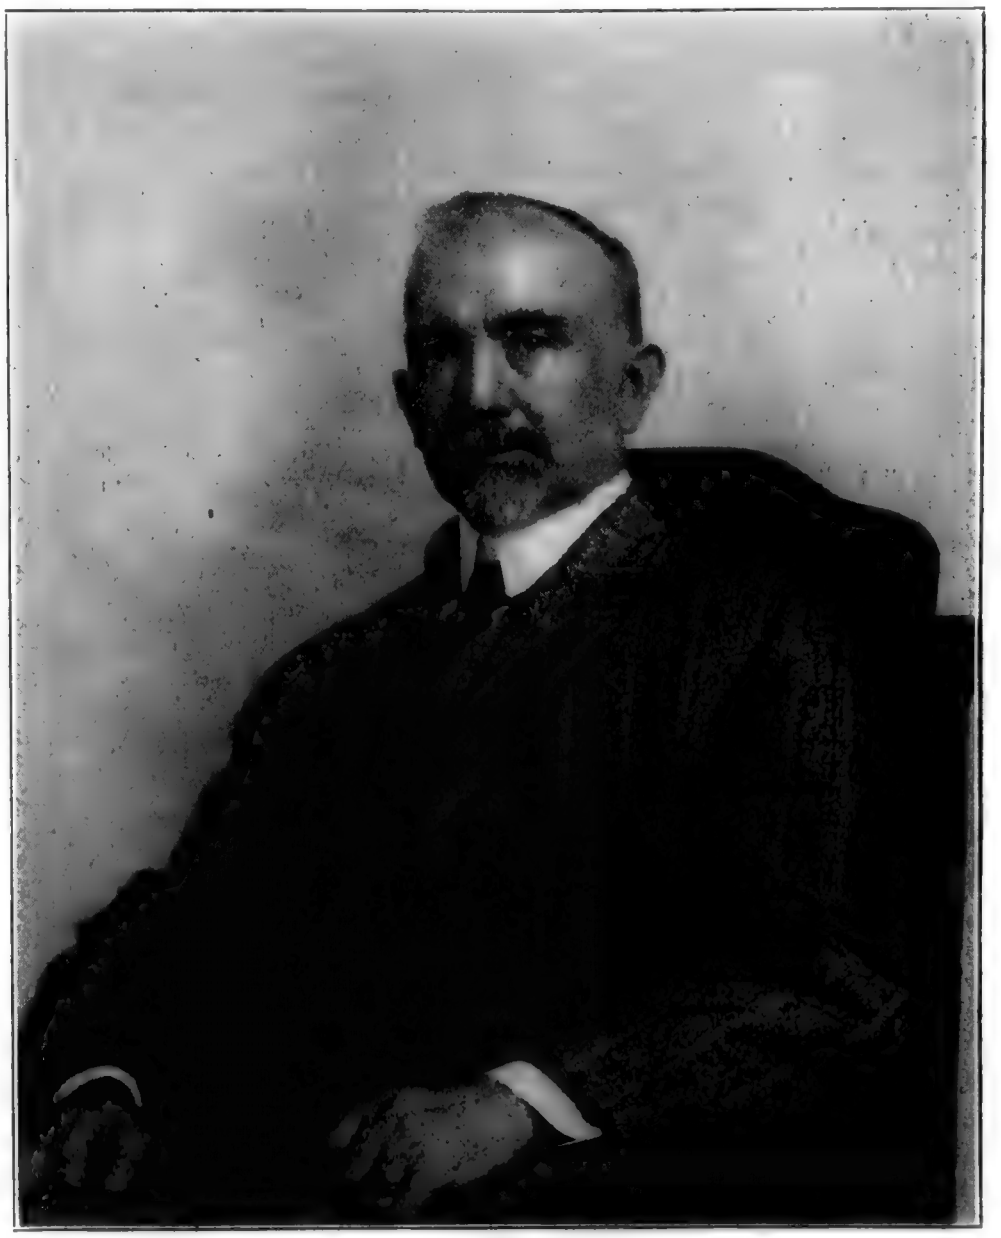
The selection of the next meeting place provoked spirited rivalry between Chicago and Baltimore. In the first place Secretary Dorner read invitations from the St. Louis Florists' Club, Chicago Florists' Club and Horticultural Society of Chicago.

N. L. Flitton, secretary of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, also representing other bodies in Baltimore, made a witty speech in behalf of his city, promising entertainment in true southern, hospitable style.

August Poehlmann made a neat talk backing up the invitation of the Chicago Florists' Club, and J. C. Vaughan expressed the belief that Chicago not only owes a debt of hospitality to the national trade body, but that the best interests of the society require a meeting at such a central western point.

In response to a question by J. A. Valentine, the convention facilities of each city were explained. When W. R. Smith, of Washington, spoke for Baltimore he received an ovation.

John H. Dunlop presented an invitation from Montreal, if not for 1911, then for 1912.



Polls were open one hour. The vote stood:

Baltimore, 180.

Chicago, 135.

R. A. Vincent and J. F. Ammann were tellers.

J. C. Vaughan moved to make it unanimous for Baltimore, which was done with a cheer.

F. R. Pierson.
(President Society of American Florists.)

Nomination of Officers.

Nomination of officers having been reached, the following names were proposed:

The Gladiolus Society.

The coöperation of the new American Gladiolus Society undoubtedly did something to increase the trade display of cut blooms of gladioli, which were more numerous and larger than ever before, in addition to which there was the competitive exhibition of blooms for a fine list of special prizes. These classes were staged on the balcony of the new hall and were considered to be a fine start at a gladiolus exhibition. The judging was done by H. Youell, L. M. Gage and E. H. Cushman. The awards were as follows:

Vaughan silver medal for twenty-five spikes Mrs. Francis King—B. Hammond Tracy, Wenham, Mass.

Henderson prize for best twelve varieties now on the market—H. W. Koerner, Milwaukee, first; John Lewis Childs, Floral Park, N. Y., second.

Rawson silver medal for best collection of twenty-five varieties—Arthur Cowee, Berlin, N. Y.

Rawson silver medal for most artistic basket—B. Hammond Tracy.

Rawson silver medal for best American seedling never before exhibited—Vaughan's Seed Store on a Princeps seedling, red.

Rawson bronze medal for ten spikes scarlet—Arthur Cowee.

Rawson silver medal for ten spikes purest white—Vaughan's Seed Store.

A. L. Miller prize for best showing pink and white varieties—Arthur Cowee.

Cushman prizes for best twenty-five white—Arthur Cowee first, B. Hammond Tracy second.

Arthur T. Boddington prize for best yellow—E. E. Stewart, Rives Junction, Mich.

H. H. Groff special prize—Arthur Cowee.

There was only one entry in the several classes provided for amateurs, from B. F. Ferry, Whiteville, Conn.

Meeting of Ladies' S. A. F.

The annual meeting of the Ladies' S. A. F. was held in the parlors of the Seneca hotel at 11 a. m. on Wednesday, and was attended by nearly seventy members, demonstrating for all time the wisdom of creating this splendid organization, which has grown steadily from its inception until now, when its membership totals 211. The meeting continued till nearly 1 p. m., and was most harmonious and interesting. The address of welcome, delivered by Mrs. Montgomery, was an eloquent tribute to women's influence and progress, full of good advice and inspiration. In response Mrs. J. C. Vaughan gratefully expressed the society's appreciation, and presented to the lady an immense bouquet of American Beauties.

All the suggested amendments were passed, after careful discussion, in which many of the ladies, especially Secretary Maynard, evinced rare oratorical and forensic ability. Miss Meinhardt made a charming and efficient presiding officer. A rising vote of thanks for her able work during the last year was given, with the handkerchief cheer, which the society utilizes in place of the "Hip, hip, hurrah!" of the sterner sex.

Mrs. Vaughan, Miss Fulmer and Mrs. Grant Wilson all spoke eloquently in behalf of a $50 vase, appropriately engraved, to be awarded for the best table decoration at the National Flower Show in Boston, which vote was unanimously carried.

The election of officers for 1911 resulted as follows: President, Mrs. J. V. Phillips, Brooklyn, N. Y.; first vice-president, Mrs. Julius Roehrs, Jr., Rutherford, N. J.; second vice-president, Miss Margaret Vesey, Fort Wayne, Ind.; secretary, Mrs. C. H. Maynard, Detroit, Mich.; treasurer, Mrs. A. M. Herr, Lancaster, Pa.

Wednesday Evening.

The illustrated lecture on "Trees, Shrubs and Flowering Plants," by John Dunbar, assistant superintendent of parks at Rochester, set for Wednesday evening, was postponed because of Mr. Dunbar's illness, and in its place J. L. Cowles, secretary of the Postal Progress League, talked on the parcels post, a subject which should interest all florists, but which doesn't seem to.

In the absence of W. N. Rudd, who hasn't missed a convention before in years, his paper on "Value of Experiment Stations to Ornamental Horticulture" was read by the secretary.

A lengthy report by Benjamin Hammond, chairman of the committee on school gardens, recording the progress of the movement and showing much hard work by the chairman, was received and ordered printed in full in the report.

Mr. Cowles presented a set of three resolutions endorsing the parcels post proposition. The society has heretofore fought shy of a decided stand in the matter, but, after a reply by P. O'Mara and others, the resolutions were adopted.

Ladies' Reception.

The Ladies' S. A. F., whose members had been taken during the afternoon for an automobile ride through Rochester's beautiful streets and parks, tendered its annual reception to the gentlemen at the Hotel Seneca Wednesday evening. The attendance was large and the officers, present, past and elect, who stood in the receiving line, heard many compliments for themselves, their society and their social function. Elaborate refreshments were served in the big hotel's best style, and then there was dancing until midnight to the music of an excellent orchestra.

As to its social features, this year's convention must certainly be put down as the best ever.

Thursday's Session.

J. A. Valentine presented a brief report of the progress of the Retailers' Association.

date, showing the splendid prospects. He stated that for the trades' display, which is to be held in a separate hall in the same building during the national exhibition at Boston next March, over 5,000 feet of space already is sold. He recommended that a special convention of the S. A. F. be held in Boston, opening March 26, 1911, and it was so voted, unanimously.

Officers were elected by acclamation, there being but one nominee for each office. President-elect Asmus made a speech pledging his efforts and asking the coöperation of the older heads.

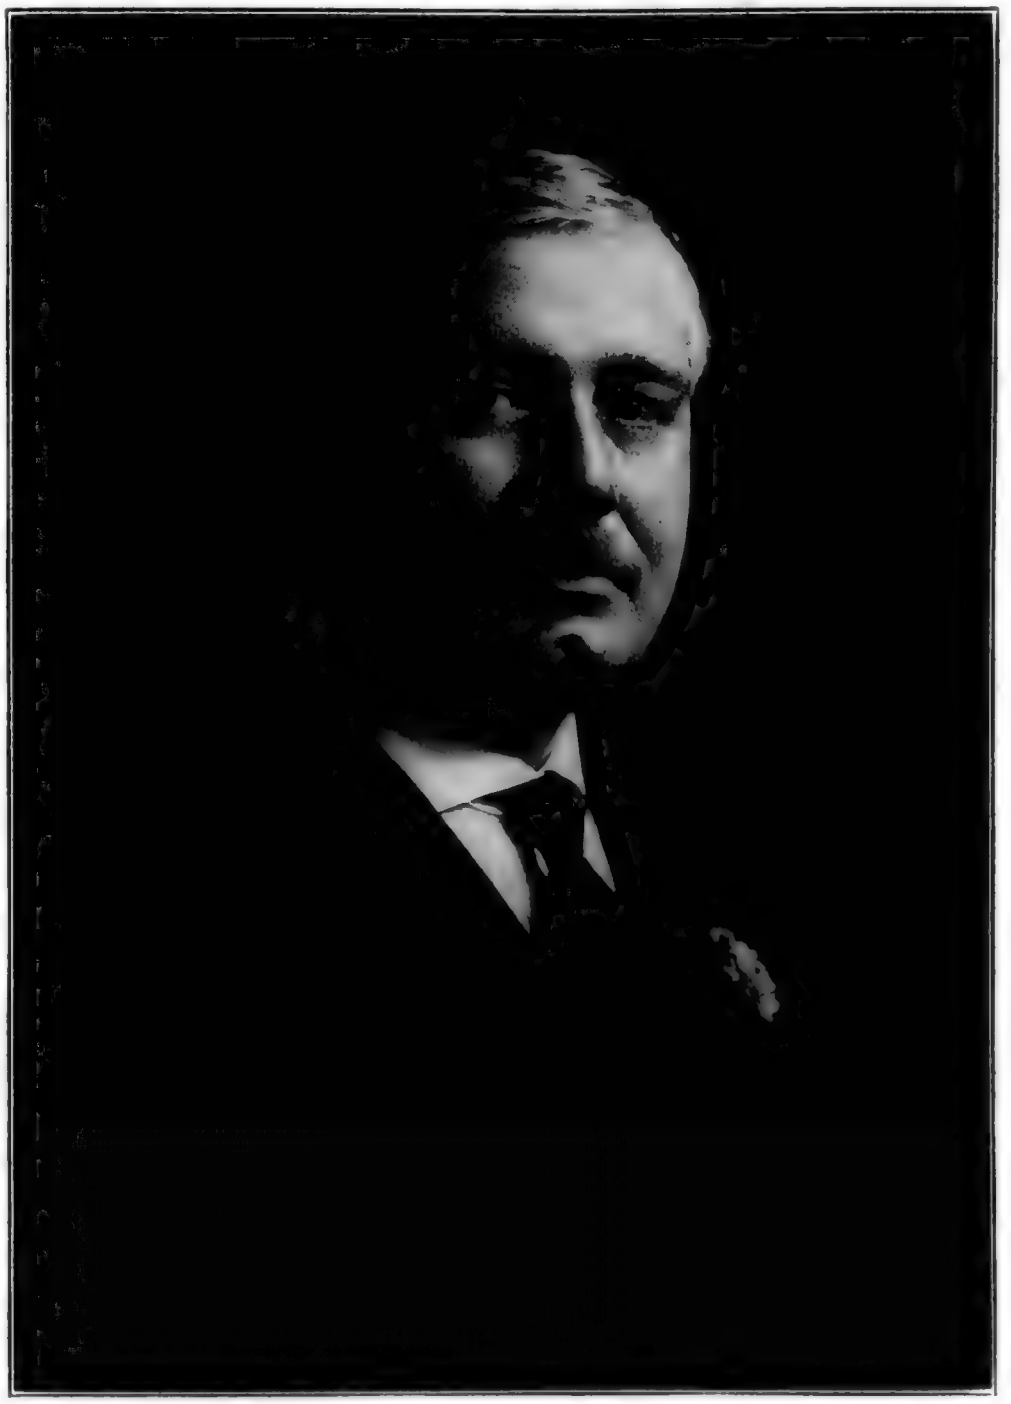
The proposed amendments to the constitution, to make the directors elective and the secretary and treasurer appointive, were defeated. The proposition to change the date of meeting regularly from August to spring had been voted on by postal and showed 238 for and 369 against. The amendment providing for the change was therefore laid on the table for one year.

The proposition to raise the life membership fee to $50 was defeated.

Resolutions were adopted favoring the request made by New York florists for a state appropriation for greenhouses for experimental work at Cornell. nell.

President Pierson was presented with an elegant chest of silver as the usual memento of the occasion.

Thursday Afternoon.



W. B. Du Rie presented a report for the committee on state vice-presidents' thirty-one reports. They found them full of interest and recommended that they be ordered printed. The reports of A. M. Terrill, of Calgary, Alberta, and H. Papworth, New Orleans, were specially mentioned as showing progress in the extremes of latitude.

Prof. H. H. Whetzel, of Cornell, the society's pathologist, presented a brief verbal report and asked permission to submit a written report for the society's annual volume. He asked all members to bring to his attention such fungous diseases as cause loss, and proposed coöperative work in which Cornell and the florists divide the expense.

The committee on president's address—J. A. Valentine, Robert Craig, E. G. Hill, W. R. Smith and J. C. Vaughan—commended the document as able and well considered. It endorsed the recommendations regarding the affiliation of kindred societies, and believed a mid-Lent meeting would promote coöperation. The committee endorsed the recommendation to make the directors elective and the secretary appointive, but did not approve the recommendation to increase the life membership fee to $50.

No N. C. H. Appropriation.

J. Otto Thilow presented a report on the work of the National Council of Horticulture. He commended the work in unmeasured terms and said a word for the services of H. C. Irish and W. N. Rudd. P. O'Mara passed some criticism of the work of the Council and stated that he opposed further appropriations in its support. This provoked a warm discussion, in which E. G. Hill and J. C. Vaughan commended the work, and W. J. Stewart, W. A. Manda and J. K. M. L. Farquhar opposed the appropriation. On a motion to appropriate $150, as per a previous recommendation of the board of directors, a viva voce vote was declared to be in favor of the affirmative. On call for a division, the vote stood: For the appropriation, 31; against it, 44.

Friday's Program.

Friday the visitors are to be in the hands of the Rochester Florists' Club. They are to be taken to Manitou Beach for the afternoon and to Ontario Beach for the evening, both popular lake resorts.

Friday morning early James Vick's Sons will take an excursion party by special train to inspect their trial grounds.

SECTIONAL MEETINGS.

Gladiolus Society.

President I. S. Hendrickson occupied the chair at a well attended meeting of the Gladiolus Society at Rochester, August 18. The reports of President Hendrickson and Secretary Gage showed splendid progress, the society having already 137 members. In Mr. Hendrickson's address he urged the importance of the work with reference to nomenclature. It was voted to hold the next meeting at Boston next March. The following committees were appointed: Exhibition, H. Youell, L. M. Gage, E. H. Cushman and Arthur Cowee; Press, H. Youell, L. M. Gage and L. B. Judson; Memberships, W. E. Cahill, J. B. The Gladiolus Society.

The coöperation of the new American Gladiolus Society undoubtedly did something to increase the trade display of cut blooms of gladioli, which were more numerous and larger than ever before, in addition to which there was the competitive exhibition of blooms for a fine list of special prizes. These classes were staged on the balcony of the new hall and were considered to be a fine start at a gladiolus exhibition. The judging was done by H. Youell, L. M. Gage and E. H. Cushman. The awards were as follows:

Vaughan silver medal for twenty-five spikes Mrs. Francis King—B. Hammond Tracy, Wenham, Mass.

Retailers' Association.

The Retail Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association held two sessions at Rochester, August 18. President Valentine explained fully the objects of the association and it was unanimously decided to go ahead on the lines planned. A Mr. Eldredge was present, representing a concern in which he is financially interested, which seeks to perfect a system for the transfer of retail orders, and proposing coöperation with the retailers' organization, but it was decided too late to consider such a proposition. At the second session Mr. Valentine described the system of bookkeeping in use in his store, and there was a discussion of the question whether it pays retail florists also to be growers.

Hail Association.

The Florists' Hail Association held its annual meeting at Rochester, August 18, during the interval provided for the meetings of the several sectional and special societies. E. G. Hill is president. Secretary Esler's report showed "1,660 carrying insurance on the equivalent of 34,636,555 feet of glass. Losses representing a breakage of 222,413 square feet of single thick glass and 82,757 square feet of double thick glass, have been paid during the year, amounting to $27,378.46; 1,520 losses have been adjusted since the organization of the F. H. A., involving a total expenditure of more than $188,000.00. The emergency fund is exhausted, and $3,301.20 has been borrowed from the reserve fund, of which $1,585.45 in cash remains on hand. After paying out over $82,000 in the last three years, an extra assessment is necessary, for the first time since the organization of the association, to restore funds borrowed of the reserve fund, and put the F. H. A. upon a strong cash basis. The time of levy will be fixed by the directors, and the officials have not a shadow of a doubt but that it will be promptly paid."

Treasurer Heacock's report of the year's financial operations summarizes as follows:

Dr. General Fund—
Balance August 1, 1909	$ 7,114.68
Receipts for year ending August 1, 1910	32,994.38
	$40,109.06
Cr. General Fund—
Losses paid Aug. 1, 1909, to Aug. 1, 1910	$27,378.46
By expenses	3,301.36
By investments	7,842.03
Miscellaneous	1.76
By balance on hand	1,585.45
	$40,109.06

The reserve fund investments total $22,000 in bonds and last year brought an interest return of $970.

H. H. Ritter and J. C. Vaughan were elected directors. At a meeting of the directors, officers were elected as follows: President, E. G. Hill; vice-president, J. T. Temple; treasurer, Joseph Heacock; secretary, J. G. Esler. An extra assessment was ordered.

BOWLING.

Thursday was bowling day and it is apparent that interest in the sport is reviving. Forty-five ladies participated in the morning games and there were eleven cities represented by five-men teams for the big inter-city contest of the afternoon, which was so long drawn out that it was not finished until late in the evening.

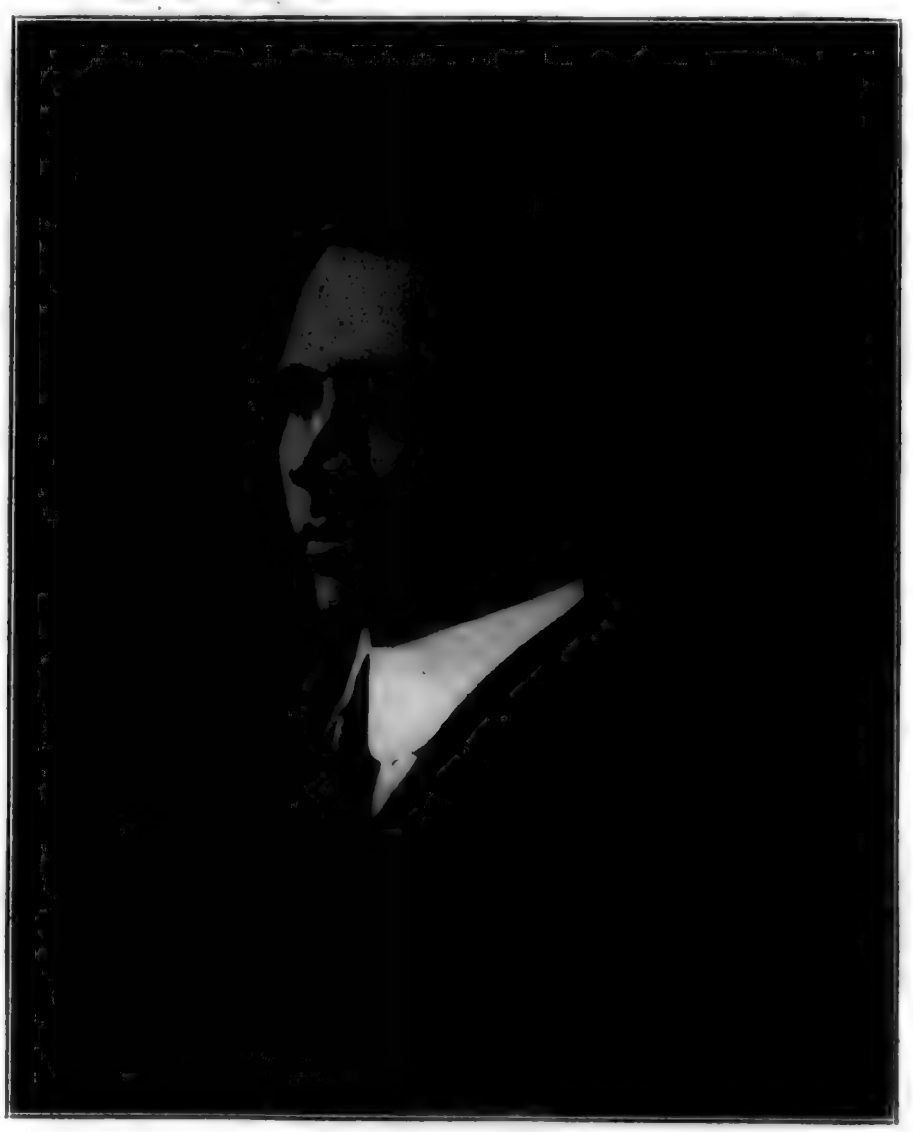
On Wednesday evening C. L. Seybold and A. F. Vick bowled for a championship cup, the former winning six out of eleven games.

THE TRADES' DISPLAY.

A Veritable Exposition.

The trades' display is the feature of predominating interest and importance at the S. A. F. conventions, and it grows apace. If the society only could make equal progress in its other departments all would be "merry as a marriage bell." The exhibition not only increases in size, but it improves in quality. Better stock is shown and it is staged more attractively, for exhibitors find they must bring nothing second class and that the more thought they put on display and arrangement the more attention they get. The supply people especially appreciate this.

The showing at Rochester this year again eclipsed all records. The plantsmen came up as strongly as usual, the supply houses represented were more numerous than ever, and the displays better in every way. The material men occupied increased space, and the coöperation of the Gladiolus Society resulted in a larger showing of cut blooms. Two large halls and a balcony were crowded to the limit, and two of the largest exhibits, those of Lord & Burnham Co. and Hitchings & Co., were forced into the basement, where, if somewhat out of the way, they had at least plenty of room and a degree of privacy that caused many growers to give a more careful inspection than otherwise would have been the case.



Chas. H. Vick made an ideal superintendent. All the arrangements were well thought out in advance, and the many carloads of material were installed promptly and with little confusion; but new exhibits were added every day.

Notes of the exhibits:

Ribbons and Supplies.

M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia, eliminated the staples from their display and concentrated on the novelties and specialties, making a feature of natural effects. Perhaps the most attractive of the new things were the butterflies, humming-birds, canaries and small doves, the spun silk butterflies being especially good. A line of twig baskets covered with natural moss fungus was pointed out as particularly popular. A German umber parchment paper was featured, for lining high-class boxes. Real Panama hats were shown in 4-inch and 8-inch sizes. There was a large line of lace holders for the old-fashioned brides' bouquets, and an equally large assortment of scarfs for the modern bouquets. Corsage shields for violets also were shown in variety. A prepared cycas leaf was like fresh cut. Waterproof crepe paper was featured and an artificial poinsettia with foliage was put to the front. These are, of course, only a few of the lines shown. B. Eschner was in charge, as usual, with several salesmen.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia, occupied more square feet of space than any other exhibitor, and Sidney Bayersdorfer said it took twenty-six big basket cases to contain the line. Among the novelties he pointed out were: Imported gold and silver baskets for table favors and gifts; prepared ferns in variety in a wide range of new colors; artificial orchids, the cattleyas especially like those of nature; waltz krantz, or wood wreaths, natural materials perpetuated; a wire clip for display cards or price tickets; two-tone immortelles in several combinations, the center being a different but harmonious color from the outer part; rattan baskets trimmed with Roman gold; a large line of baskets decorated with gold braid; some novel shapes and colors of willow baskets, fitted with pans; gold or bronzed baskets, just landed from France; French favor baskets in many bright colors; and, it must not be forgotten, the Chanticleer basket, shaped as its name implies. There also was a large line of Imperial china and an infinite variety of other articles. Martin Reukauf was in charge, with four assistants.

The S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., Philadelphia, had a table of ribbons that represented an invoice value of almost $5,000. Made-up ties for violets, valley, orchids, etc., were featured, also a special line of combination flower and foliage colors in ribbons. A special ribbon for valley was shown. Several new shades in orchid ribbons were put forward. The Killarney ribbon was shown in all widths, from shower up to 8 inch. Many new patterns in chiffons were included. All the staples in florists' ribbons were on view. E. J. Fancourt had as his assistants Robert Greenlaw and Alfred Swan.

Lion & Co., New York, featured silks in their ribbon booth. A wire-edged gauze five inches wide was shown in many colors. An all-silk chiffon made in America was presented for comparison with the best grades of imported chiffon. A silk ribbon matting for pot covers was a new line. An 8-inch silk netting is in several colors. A moisture-proof Malinette comes in many colors. A silk scarf for brides' bouquets is ninety-four inches long. All-silk corsage shields are in many styles, and a novelty is a moisture-proof shield to be used with violets, the color and shape being so near those of the violet foliage that the shield is called Invisible. J. Berg and M. Alexander were in charge. Their souvenirs were large, fat, black cigars.

Wertheimer Bros., New York, showed an improved sprinkle-proof chiffon and featured several weaves of chiffon distinct from former styles. A ribbon with wire edges was shown in many widths and colors. A silk butterfly on a quivering wire, for corsage bouquets, the house says is all the rage in Europe. The display included the firm's large line of staples in florists' ribbons and chiffons. S. B. Wertheimer was in charge, with two salesmen. They gave visitors a paper butterfly that balances on the finger, to call attention to the silk one.

Schloss Bros., New York, had their usual large line of staple ribbons, chiffons and violet ties, and, in addition, showed many novelties. A silk, lace or chiffon bouquet holder is named "New Fad"; a silk and chenille combination violet cord was pointed out; a striped silk gauze 1½-inch and 2½-inch for corsage work was shown in several colors; an imported fancy ribbon in flowered patterns is a foot wide; moisture-proof chiffons were numerously shown; corsage novelties were many, a striped gauze shower effect being especially good; bouquet scarfs were a feature. Emil Schloss was in charge. Scissors were given as souvenirs.

Julius Neidinger, of Philadelphia, showed his usual large line of wax-flower designs, a larger line of baskets, mostly with pans, than heretofore handled, and a variety of Christmas novelties, including log effects trimmed with prepared ferns and artificial poinsettias. George Hampton was in charge.

H. D. Mann Co., Syracuse, N. Y., showed Karnak brassware for ferneries and a gold-lined silver orchid vase. There also was a variety of baskets, chiffons, violet ties, vases, fern dishes, mats, crepe paper and staple supplies. F. W. Bannister was in charge.

Andrew Wilson, Chatham, N. J., exhibited a unique device for stemming galax and other material. It consists of a zinc arrow with a perforated clasp at the top, easily bent around the stems. Mr. Wilson was personally showing how it works.

George B. Hart, Rochester, had two exhibits in charge of C. H. Vick, Jr., son of the superintendent of the trades' display. One was a novel arrangement of willow basket pot covers and cut blooms of asters. The other included baskets in variety, wire ware, ribbons, prepared magnolia and oak foliage, and Dutch and French bulbs. This is the first season that Mr. Hart has handled bulbs.

Philip L. Carbone, Boston, who is a retail florist as well as a wholesaler of imported novelties, had a table of small the association and it was unanimously decided to go ahead on the lines planned. A Mr. Eldredge was present, representing a concern in which he is financially interested, which seeks to perfect a system for the transfer of retail orders, and proposing coöperation with the retailers' organization, but it was decided too late to consider such a proposition. At the second session Mr. Valentine described the system of bookkeeping in use in his store, and there was a discussion of the question whether it pays retail florists also to be growers.

H. H. Ritter and J. C. Vaughan were elected directors. At a meeting of the directors, officers were elected as follows: President, E. G. Hill; vice-president, J. T. Temple; treasurer, Joseph Heacock; secretary, J. G. Esler. An extra assessment was ordered.

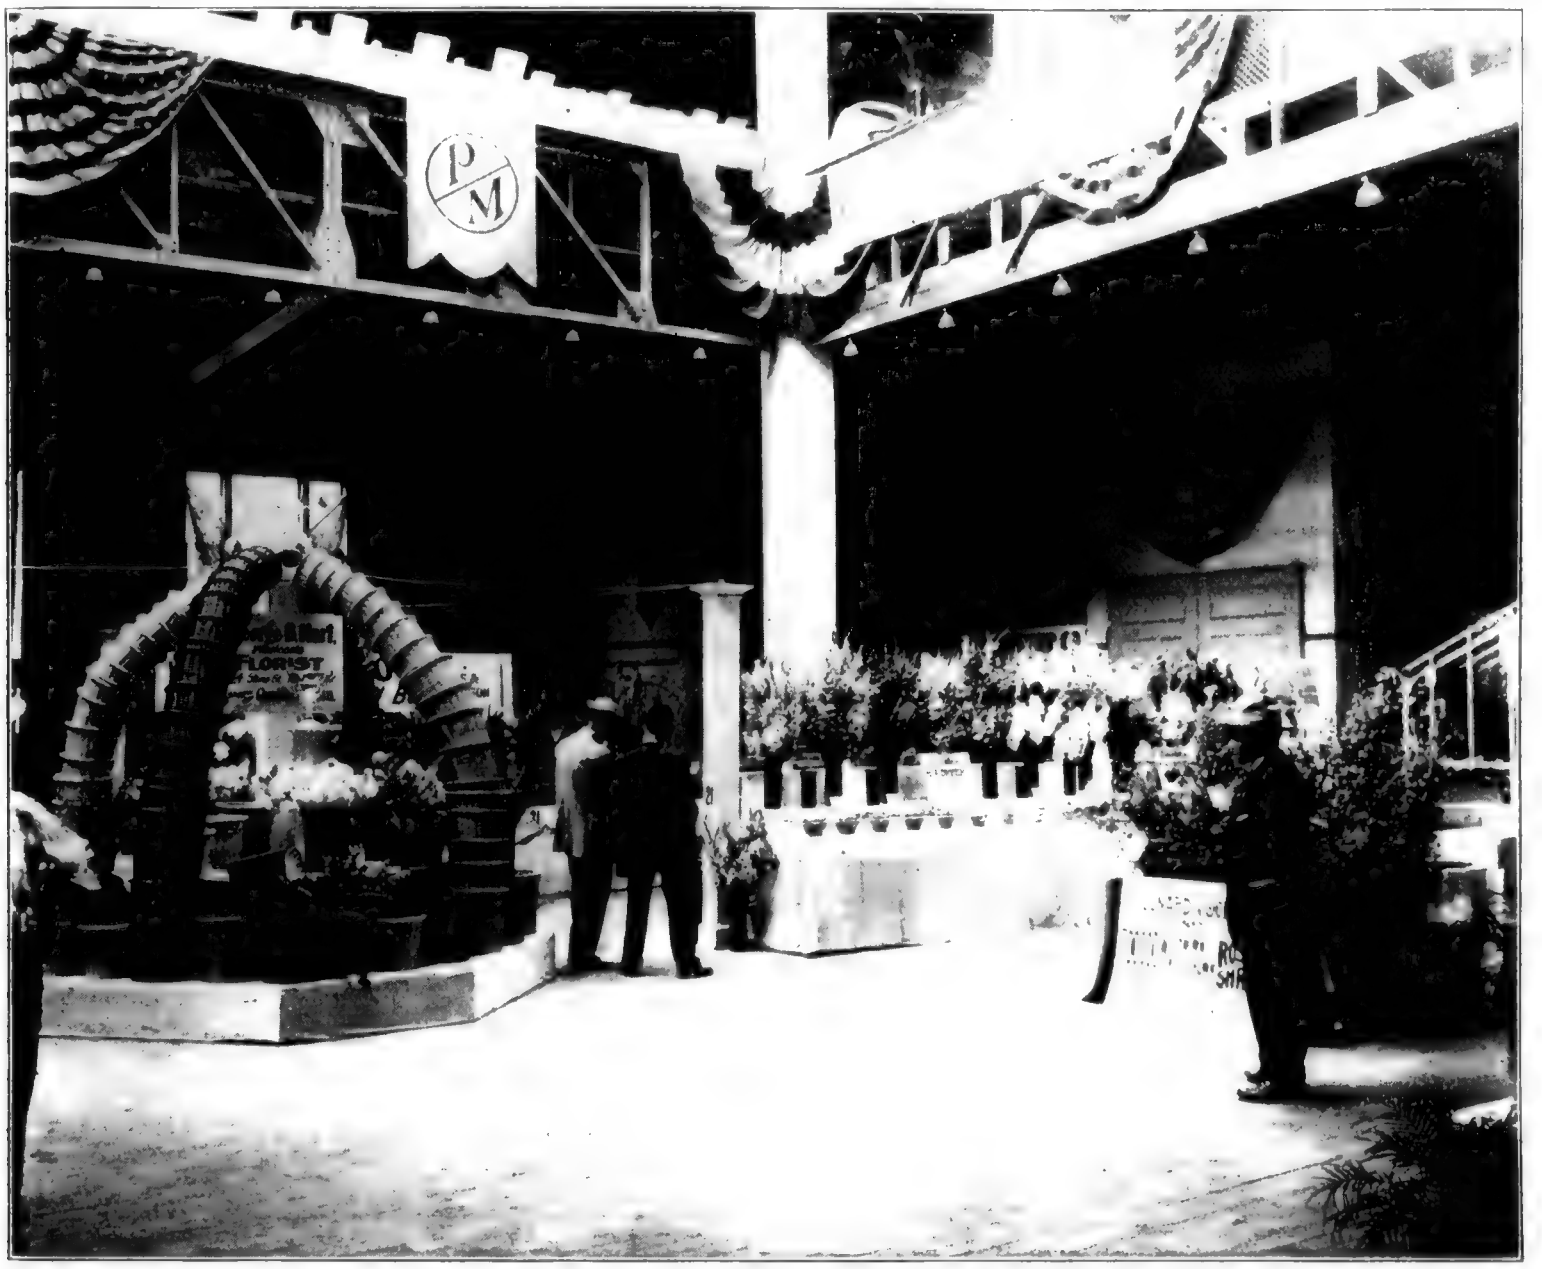
A Veritable Exposition.

The trades' display is the feature of predominating interest and importance at the S. A. F. conventions, and it grows apace. If the society only could make equal progress in its other departments all would be "merry as a marriage bell." The exhibition not only increases in size, but it improves in quality. Better stock is shown and it is staged more attractively, for exhibitors find they must bring nothing second class and that the more thought they put on display and arrangement the more attention they get. The supply people especially appreciate this.

The showing at Rochester this year again eclipsed all records. The plantsmen came up as strongly as usual, the supply houses represented were more numerous than ever, and the displays better in every way. The material men occupied increased space, and the coöperation of the Gladiolus Society resulted in a larger showing of cut blooms. Two large halls and a balcony were crowded to the limit, and two of the largest exhibits, those of Lord & Burnham Co. and Hitchings & Co., were forced into the basement, where, if somewhat out of the way, they had at least plenty of room and a degree of privacy that caused many growers to give a more careful inspection than otherwise would have been the case.

Chas. H. Vick made an ideal superintendent. All the arrangements were well thought out in advance, and the many carloads of material were installed promptly and with little confusion; but new exhibits were added every day.

Notes of the exhibits:



Ribbons and Supplies.

M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia, eliminated the staples from their display and concentrated on the novelties and specialties, making a feature of natural effects. These are, of course, only a few of the lines shown. B. Eschner was in charge, as usual, with several salesmen.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia, occupied more square feet of space than any other exhibitor, and Sidney Bayersdorfer said it took twenty-six big basket cases to contain the line. Cut Flowers.

James Vick's Sons, Rochester, had an enormous display. A table of cut blooms of asters carried a vase of practically every variety which may be had in flower at this date and above it was probably the largest floral design ever made. It was a double faced sign, four feet high and thirty-six feet long, made of white asters with the words "Vick—Rochester" in purple asters. It was estimated that over 12,500 were used in it. The balance of this table was given over to a full line of Dutch and French bulbs. A second table, the full width of the hall, carried an extremely large collection of cut blooms of herbaceous plants and annuals, all correctly named. The gladioli and phloxes were particularly fine. W. H. Dildine put in as much time as possible at the exhibit.

Vick & Hill Co., Rochester, complained that the season prevented showing more than the early types of asters, but the display nevertheless was a large one. A large number of plants were shown in pots, full of bloom, and the same varieties were shown in vases. Queen of the Market was there in eight colors. The Daybreak family was represented by seven colors; the latest is a light blue. Mikado, pink, which has been selected as the official flower of the city and renamed Rochester, was in evidence. A new one that looked good was White Fleece, shown both as pot plants and cut. The firm's well-known strain of ruffled giant petunias also were shown. F. W. Vick and A. F. Vick were at the exhibit whenever their official duties permitted.

Arthur Cowee, Berlin, N. Y., had 332 vases of gladiolus blooms, not counting those shown in competitive classes. There were over 500 varieties, the display on account of the peculiar season consisting almost entirely of the Meadowvale florists' light mixture, with a number of novelties. Of Groff's hybrids Mr. Cowee pointed out Afterglow, Peace, Dawn, La Luna and Blue Jay as notable. A trio of fine scarlets not yet disseminated was War, Dominion and Empire. Some of the varieties never before exhibited were Aeroplane, London, Intensity, Silver Star and Lavendula. Mr. Cowee brought his usual staff of young lady assistants.

John Lewis Childs, Floral Park, N. Y., staged 125 varieties of gladioli, cut blooms, a dozen spikes to a vase. One side of the long table was entirely Childsii varieties, most of the other side Gandavensis varieties, with one end and part of the side exclusively Lemoinei sorts, with the prominent end reserved to America, introduced by Childs, which still stands without a peer as a commercial variety. Some of the newer and good Childsii sorts shown were: Aline, white; Wild Rose, rose; Silver Sheen, white flushed pink; Scribe, mottled; Rosy Spray, rose; Cardinal, red. Two notable sorts on the Lemoinei side were Klondike, primrose yellow with red throat, and Baron Hulot, a purple that will pass for violet blue. Of the Gandavensis sorts Shakespeare, Sunshine, Gloria Brightwood, Sulphur King, Octoroon and Canary Bird were among the best. I. S. Hendrickson was in charge of the exhibit.

E. E. Stewart, Rives Junction, Mich., staged some seventy-five varieties of gladioli, cut blooms, about half seedlings of his own raising or selected from untested varieties raised by others; the rest were standard sorts. He featured Pres. Taft and Golden Queen, which were given awards at last year's convention. Three new ones pointed out were named for his three daughters: Lucille is pink with orange throat, Ruth is dark variegated pink with yellow throat, and Shirley is pink with a maroon blotch. It has been a dry summer in Michigan, according to Mr. Stewart, who personally was in charge.

B. Hammond Tracy, Wenham, Mass., had a display planned to demonstrate the possibilities of the gladiolus as a decorative flower. The principal exhibit was a dinner-table complete, decorated with gladioli. There also was a mirror decoration and a number of attractively arranged vases were shown. Mrs. Tracy's skill contributed not a little to the effect.

Frank Banning, Kinsman, O., exhibited a large quantity of Niagara, a seedling gladiolus of his own raising, a little lighter than America. A second seedling shown is not named, but is from America and a little darker than that variety. Mr. Banning was on hand.

H. W. Koerner, Milwaukee, Wis., showed new giant flowered hybrid gladioli, only one of which was named, Vanus.

E. D. Smith & Co., Adrian, Mich., sent for exhibition a vase of their new early white chrysanthemum, a companion to Golden Glow.

Building Material.

Lord & Burnham Co., New York, had a model pipe frame house of such size that every part could be closely inspected. It embodied the giant arch with V-shaped truss, wide space in center between the two posts used in a 28-foot house; concrete walls, with real wrought iron flat posts partly embedded, carrying the shaft for a side ventilator that occupies so little space that no part projects beyond the heating coils hung on the wall, the sash hinged directly to the eave plate. A No. 30 sectional boiler exhibited was sold to Asher M. Coe; with it was an extra section to show the hub connection where head room is lacking. A section of cast iron bench was put up. A section of curved eave construction showed how the curved bar is reinforced from purlin to base; a leakproof splice was shown in the bars. An iron gutter carries a flange along the center, underneath, so that a side wall or partition may be easily and securely attached. A line of pipe hooks included all sizes from one single to eight double for all sizes of pipe. Two patterns of swinging pipe hangers were shown, one with ice-tong claws. M. C. Wright was in charge of the display, with several assistants. A handsome card case with memorandum pad was given as a souvenir.

Hitchings & Co., New York, who have not exhibited for a number of years, had a most interesting display, in charge of J. McArthur and J. B. Jackson. The newest feature was the Sefton double miter-geared sliding shaft ventilating apparatus as applied to the side of a greenhouse; the shaft does not turn, it slides; the arms are double action and do not protrude into the walk. A full-sized section of a house twenty-eight feet wide on one side showed the curved eave construction, with 24-inch glass, and on the other the angle-iron eave plate with 16-inch glass. The curved bar is reinforced with an inset of metal from the purlin to the cast-iron sill, set on concrete. A No. 18 and big No. 36 sectional boiler were shown, and a No. 16 corrugated fire-box boiler of a type the firm has sold for sixty years. A large frame showed at a glance various details of construction, including twelve types of gutter. Another similar frame showed all the details of the standard sashbar house. A third frame carried a display of photographs of notable greenhouses the company has built. On one day a leather cigar case was given as a souvenir, with cigars in them.

The John C. Moninger Co., Chicago, put up a model of a greenhouse roof to show the application of its patent hinge for ventilators. A small gilded section of piping embodied a full line of fittings. Garland Co., Des Plaines, Ill., put up a section of full-sized greenhouse, combining the well-known iron gutter with the trussed iron frame and embodying two different kinds of ice-clearing header. The King Construction Co., North Tonawanda, N. Y., put up a full-sized greenhouse and a model of a boiler-shed within. The section of house was the full iron-frame trussed construction put up by this firm in widths up to fifty-four feet without supports, using 1-inch sashbars. The boiler-shed is a new idea, all iron-frame, trussed, except the said to be a free bloomer. Mr. Miller and T. Y. Smith were in charge.

Chas. Ebele, New Orleans, had a large low table of Phœnix Roebelenii, at least seventy-five plants. He was personally in charge and says this plant can be grown faster and cheaper in the south than under glass at the north.

Chas. D. Ball, Holmesburg, Pa., showed kentias in both varieties, single and made up plants; Latania Borbonica, Areca lutescens, Cocos Weddelliana, Dracæna Sanderiana and Phœnix Roebelenii, all perfect plants. Mr. Ball and his son were both on the spot.

Lager & Hurrell, Summit, N. J., had a large table of established and freshly imported orchids. There were upwards of seventy-five varieties, the whole having an invoice value of close to $700. There were twenty varieties of cypripediums, fifteen of cattleyas and examples of practically all the commercial species. J. E. Lager was personally in charge.

Conard & Jones Co., West Grove, Pa., showed Lady Gay, Gardenia, Alba rubifolia and Philadelphia Rambler field-grown roses, also viburnums, Althea Jean de Arc, Spiræa prunifolia and S. Anthony Waterer. A Boston fern was planted in the Illinois self-watering window box, for which the firm has the agency for several states. Robert Pyle was in charge.

A table of cut blooms of asters carried a vase of practically every variety which may be had in flower at this date and above it was probably the largest floral design ever made. It was a double faced sign, four feet high and thirty-six feet long, made of white asters with the words "Vick—Rochester" in purple asters. It was estimated that over 12,500 were used in it. The balance of this table was given over to a full line of Dutch and French bulbs. A second table, the full width of the hall, carried an extremely large collection of cut blooms of herbaceous plants and annuals, all correctly named. The gladioli and phloxes were particularly fine. W. J. Dildine put in as much time as possible at the exhibit.

The booth had rugs and cozy chairs surrounding a diamond-shaped horizontal frame on the four sides of which the line was shown. SECRETARY'S REPORT.

[The following is the report of Secretary H. B. Dorner, read before the Society of American Florists, in convention at Rochester, August 16 to 19, 1910.]

The books and other properties pertaining to the secretary's office were turned over by the outgoing secretary early in January. Much commendation is due Mr. Rudd for the excellent and simple system that he has devised for the keeping of accounts and records. It is only by a careful examination of these that one can fully appreciate the thought and labor put into the work.

Condition of Finances.

The finances of the society are steadily improving. The permanent or life membership fund, August 1, had reached the sum of $8,313.50, and to this amount will be added $125 for five new life memberships which have been received since that date. A full financial statement will be given separately.

Y., set up an imposing row of Furman sectional boilers, a little one at one end, a big one at the other, and three in-between sizes. This boiler has had awards at seven previous S. A. F. conventions and the framed certificates hung on the wall back of the boilers. The present patterns have a longer fire travel than ever before. F. W. Herendeen was in charge.

The American Blower Co., Detroit, showed the Detroit steam trap in operation. It is a tilting trap invented by John Morehead, who was present with G. D. Millspaugh to explain its principles.

The National Clock and Electric Mfg. Co., St. Louis, had a striking display of thermostats and registering thermometers, "the florists' watchmen." The booth had rugs and cozy chairs surrounding a diamond-shaped horizontal frame on the four sides of which the line was shown. Probably few appreciated that there are so many kinds of these articles, each one designed to meet some special need. The registering thermometers showed the days were pretty warm, but the nights fairly cool throughout the week. W. H. Arthur was demonstrator in charge.

The Kitts Mfg. Co., Oswego, N. Y., staged its hydraulic damper regulator, largely used by growers in the east, but not yet known to any great extent in the west. T. M. Nalton was on hand to explain the principle on which it operates to effect a saving in fuel.

The Taylor Steam Trap Co., Battle Creek, Mich., showed an automatic return trap of simple design that is readily convertible into a vacuum trap. Chas. R. Willey was the demonstrator.

Pots and Pottery.

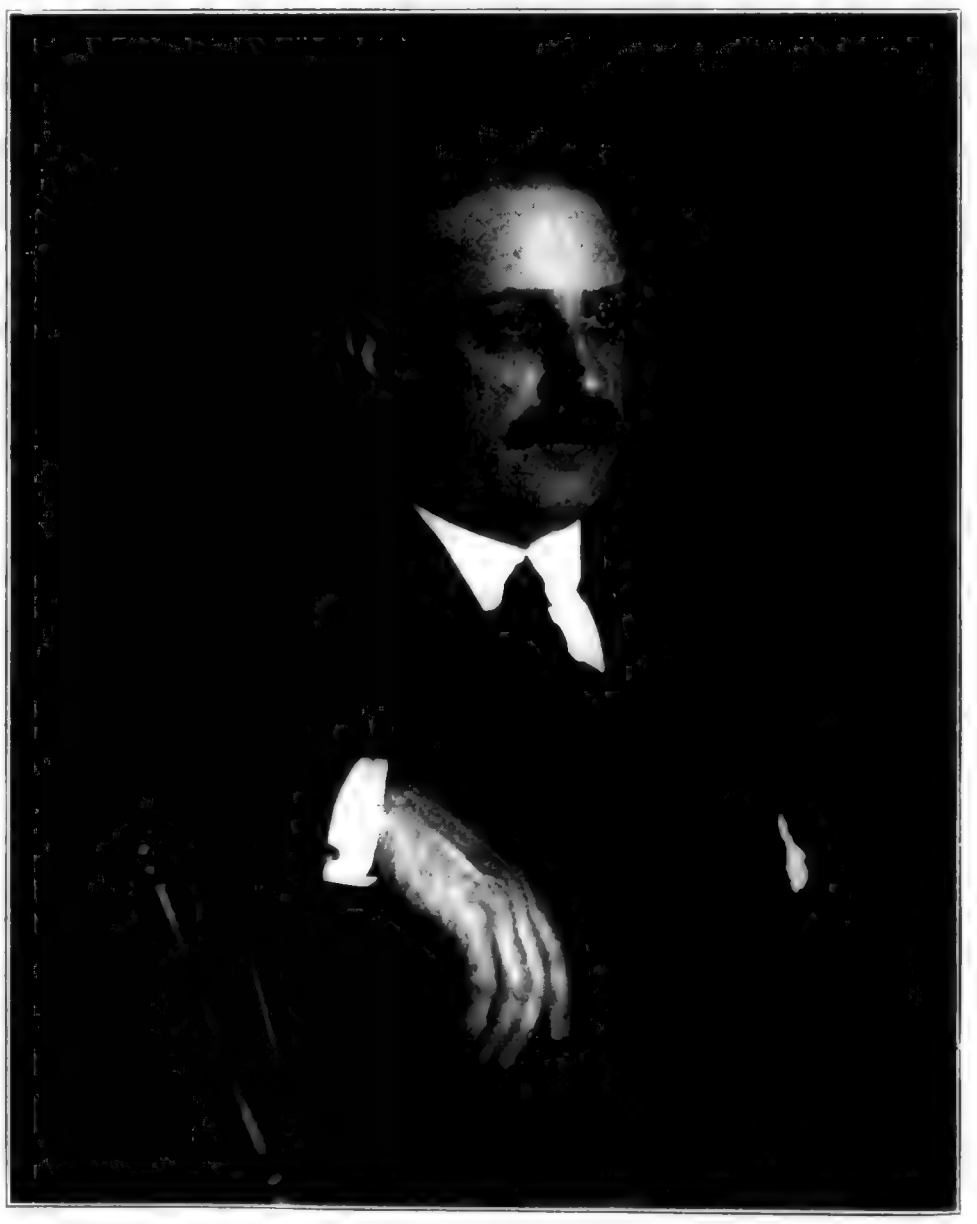
W. H. Elverson Pottery Co., New Brighton, Pa., showed red pots in sizes from 1-inch to 16-inch, also a new porch pot in 12-inch to 18-inch sizes, with a roll rim and two decorative rolls on the side. A variety of special linings for spun brass jardinieres was shown. W. H. Elverson and T. W. MacConnell were in charge.

The Ionia Pottery Co., Ionia, Mich., showed samples of its full line of pots—not red, the Ionia clay burning to a cream color, almost white. H. S. Kolder, mayor of Ionia, was in charge.

A. H. Hews & Co., Cambridge, Mass., who began making flower pots in 1765, showed red pots in all sizes, azalea pots, orchid baskets, hanging baskets and a new line of inside glazed vases in several shapes. L. D. Bryant was in charge.

The Peters & Reed Pottery Co., Zanesville, O., showed its line of red pots and also a line of jardinieres, cemetery vases, azalea pots, fern pans, cut flower vases, etc.

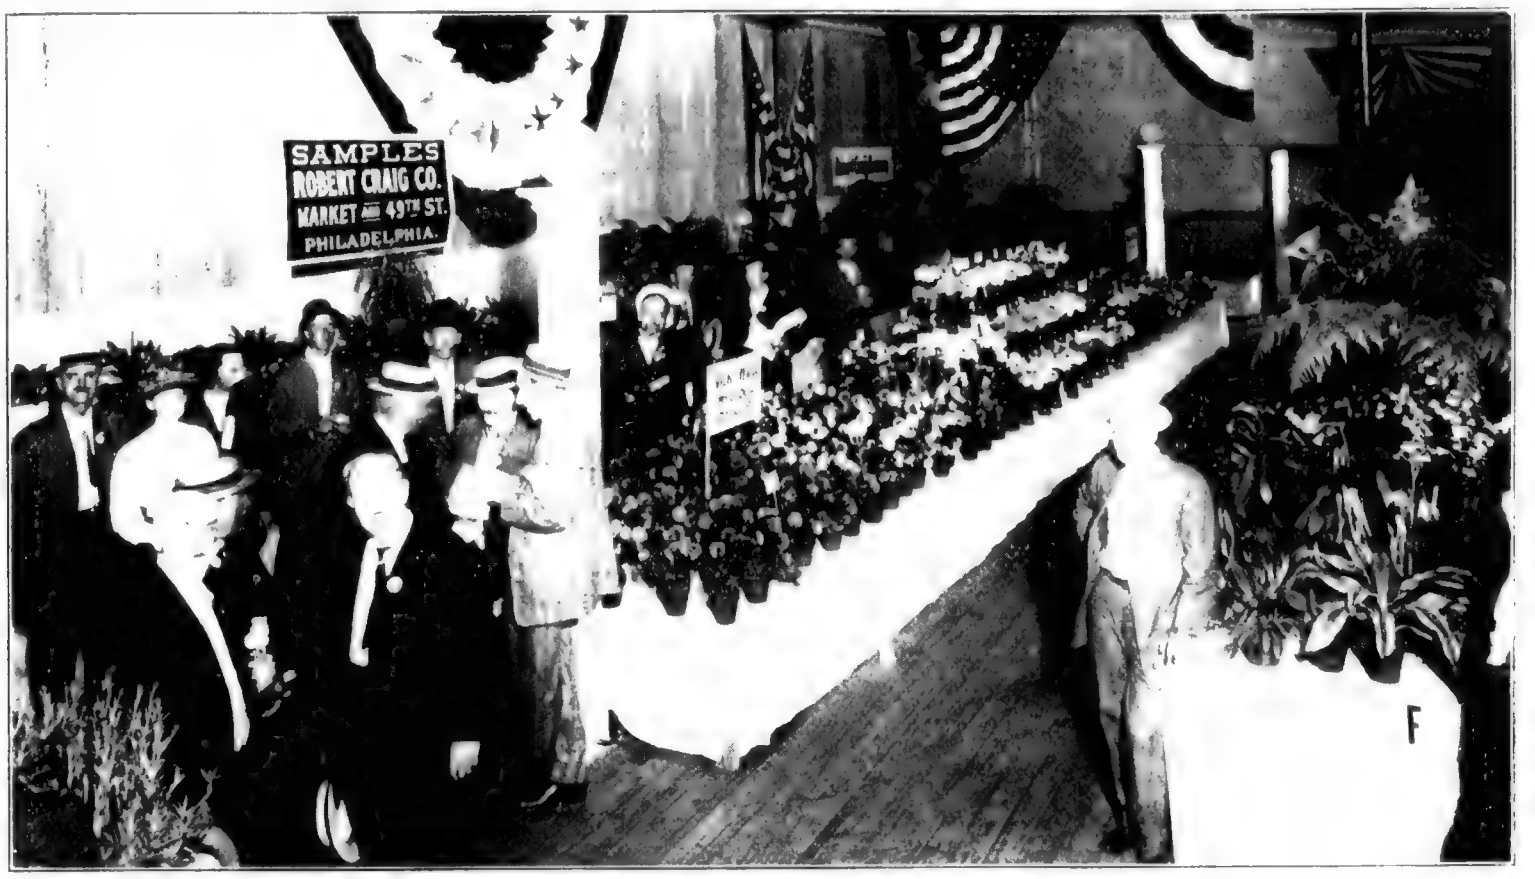
The Syracuse Pottery Co., Syracuse, N. Y., showed a full assortment of sizes of red pots, in charge of James C. Butler.



The Roseville Pottery Co., Zanesville, O., showed a large line of art pottery, in charge of C. H. Babcock.

The Detroit Flower Pot Mfg. showed its line of red pots. Harry Balsley was in charge.

Hilfinger Bros.' Pottery, Fort Edwards, N. Y., showed samples of its red pots; Alex. Hilfinger in charge.



Decorative Greens.

L. B. Brague & Son, Hinsdale, Mass., had a table covered with green sheet moss on which was shown hardy cut ferns, baled spruce, Christmas trees, bouquet green, etc. L. H. Brague was in charge.

The Crowl Fern Co., Millington, Mass., showed hardy cut ferns, fancy and dagger; galax leaves, laurel wreaths and wreathing, bouquet green, Christmas trees and other greens. E. W. Vineca was in charge.

The Shaw Fern Co., Pittsfield, Mass., made prosaic dagger and fancy ferns quite attractive by showing whole plants from the woods, mixed in with small evergreen trees. L. E. Shaw was in charge.

H. J. Smith, Hinsdale, Mass., was on hand with laurel wreaths, roping, moss, hardy cut ferns, Christmas trees, etc.

E. A. Beaven, Evergreen, Ala., brought several bales of his fadeless sheet moss.

Miscellaneous.

The Illinois Heater and Mfg. Co., Chicago, entering under the name of the Conard & Jones Co., put up a large exhibit of its self-watering flower boxes. They make forty-five styles, one for every use that any other plant receptacle is made for. The display had a conspicuous place and was quickly sold. C. A. Wooley was in charge.

Benj. Hammond, Fishkill, N. Y., had an excellently staged display of his large line of paints, putty, insecticides, fungicides, lawn dressings, brushes, sprayers, etc. The booth was in charge of C. H. Hanson.

A. J. Binley, Glens Falls, N. Y., demonstrated his patent flower holder. It is a cleat of wood just the width of a paper box, with a soft tin arrowhead on each end; the cleat is pressed down on the flowers, the sharp tin forced through the paper and clinched, holding the flowers securely.

J. D. McLaurin Co., New York, had a sealing machine which uses a gummed tape to seal packages, doing away with the need for string on the cut flower boxes sent out by retailers. The line included paper and cloth labels and gummed tapes. S. S. Landon showed how the machines work.

B. S. Blake & Son, Rochester, put up a section of bench and strung it to support plants, with their new patent lock ring clip for attaching wires to the stakes. B. S. Blake was demonstrator.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

[The following is the report of Secretary H. B. Dorner, read before the Society of American Florists, in convention at Rochester, August 16 to 19, 1910.]

The books and other properties pertaining to the secretary's office were turned over by the outgoing secretary early in January. Much commendation is due Mr. Rudd for the excellent and simple system that he has devised for the keeping of accounts and records. It is only by a careful examination of these that one can fully appreciate the thought and labor put into the work.

Condition of Finances.

The finances of the society are steadily improving. The permanent or life membership fund, August 1, had reached the sum of $8,313.50, and to this amount will be added $125 for five new life memberships which have been received since that date. A full financial statement will be given separately.

Membership.

It is also gratifying to note that the membership is gradually increasing. In 1908 the membership of the society was 889 at the end of the year. In 1909 this had increased to 995. Up to August 10, 1910, the paid-up memberships number 825, which, with those who pay their dues during the convention week and the new members joining at this time, promise to surpass all records.

New Members.

The number of new members added to the roll to date is 77. Four of these came in as life members. The secretary sent out, with most of the receipts, a request that each member make an effort to secure at least one new member. In reply to this, four or five names were sent in. Few realize that if each member made an effort and secured at least one addition to the roll the membership would be almost 2,000 at the present time, instead of 995. Many plans have been devised for increasing our numbers, yet how many members have made a determined effort to convince their neighbors that they should belong to the S. A. F.?

Payment of Dues.

Many members overlook the fact that dues are payable on the first day of January, and a failure to pay them at this time calls for a second notice. This is not only additional work for the secretary, but is an extra expense to the society. This money could be well used in efforts to secure new members.

Trade Exhibition.

The trade exhibition of 1909 was a success in every way, being a great improvement over former exhibits. After all bills and the superintendent's commission were paid, a profit of $629.15 remained in the society's treasury. During the present year several changes were made in the rules governing the exhibition, principal among which were the increasing of the rates and the limiting of all signs to black lettering upon a white ground. This latter change has done much to make the exhibit more attractive.

Investment of Permanent Fund.

Following the instructions of the society, $7,500 of the permanent fund has been invested by the executive board. This investment is in the form of two loans, one of $6,000 and the other of $1,500, secured by mortgages on properties located in Fort Wayne, Ind. These securities bear interest at five per cent.

Transportation.

Applications for reduced rates to the 1910 convention were made of all the traffic associations and were met by the granting of a rate of one and three-fifths on the certificate plan by the Trunk Line Association, the New England Association, the Central Association and the Eastern Canadian Association. This rate was the lowest that could be secured under the present conditions. As usual, a charge of 25 cents is made for the vising of each certificate.

State Vice-Presidents.

Many of the state vice-presidents made quite an effort to secure new members. Many letters were sent out, but reports show that these are not as effective as they might be, due to the fact that they are easily laid aside and forgotten. The following state vice-presidents have sent in new members:

E. Allan Peirce, Waltham, Mass., 1 life, 15 annual.
Geo. B. Hart, Rochester, N. Y., 10 annual.
Alex. Miller, Dallas, Tex., 1 life, 5 annual.
Fred Holton, Milwaukee, Wis., 2 annual.
Otto Koenig, St. Louis, Mo., 2 annual.

The following members also deserve credit: W. L. Kellar and Albert Sunderbruch each sent three; F. H. Traendly and L. H. Butts each sent two; Jacob Becker, E. Dailledouze, A. F. J. Baur, F. P. Avery and E. H. Cushman each sent one; W. J. Stewart sent in one life member.

Medals.

Medals have been awarded during the past year as follows:

Bronze medal—F. R. Pierson Co., for fern, Nephrolepis elegantissima compacta, offered at St. Louis, 1909.

Silver medal—Cottage Gardens Co., for carnation Mrs. C. W. Ward, offered through the American Carnation Society at its annual exhibition, held at Pittsburg, January, 1910.

On April 8, 1910, occurred the death of Mrs. W. J. Vesey, the wife of W. J. Vesey. In Mrs. Vesey's death the Ladies' Society lost one of its best workers and the florists of the country one of their best friends.

H. B. Stringer.
(Secretary Rochester Florists' Association.)

Trade Press.

The members of the trade press have continued to give the society their cordial support. The thanks of the society are also due them for the complimentary copies of their publications sent for use in the office of the secretary.

Aid of the Society.

It should be borne in mind that the S. A. F. is for the good of its members and that the secretary is its chief clerk. Information regarding express troubles, questions regarding rates, legislation, etc., if sent to the secretary, will be placed in the hands of the proper committees for action. Such data as this will give a firmer working basis in their investigations. The society can best help you when your wants are made known. The secretary will always be ready to give all the aid possible or else refer your troubles to others who may be of help to you.

In closing, I wish to tender my heartfelt thanks to those friends who have given me so freely of their time and assistance and who by their advice have helped make my work both easier and better.

THE VISITORS.

Where so many are non-members, and hence not registered, and where so many come from near-by towns, remaining only for a few hours, it is impossible to give anything like a complete list of the visitors. Rochester

1908 the membership of the society was 889 at the end of the year. In 1909 this had increased to 995. Up to August 10, 1910, the paid-up memberships number 825, which, with those who pay their dues during the convention week and the new members joining at this time, promise to surpass all records.

Many of the state vice-presidents made quite an effort to secure new members. Many letters were sent out, but reports show that these are not as effective as they might be, due to the fact that they are easily laid aside and forgotten. The following state vice-presidents have sent in new members:

Alex. Miller, Dallas, Tex., 1 life, 5 annual.
Fred Holton, Milwaukee, Wis., 2 annual.
Otto Keenig, St. Louis, Mo., 2 annual.

The following members also deserve credit: W. L. Kellar and Albert Sunderbruch each sent three; F. H. Traendly and L. H. Butts each sent two; Jacob Becker, E. Dailledouze, A. F. J. Baur, F. P. Avery and E. H. Cushman each sent one; W. J. Stewart sent in one life member.

Medals.

Medals have been awarded during the past year as follows:

June 14, 1910, Dr. L. L. Lamborn, Alliance, O.

H. B. Stringer.
(Secretary Rochester Florists' Association.)

Trade Press.

The members of the trade press have continued to give the society their cordial support. The thanks of the society are also due them for the complimentary copies of their publications sent for use in the office of the secretary.

Aid of the Society.

It should be borne in mind that the S. A. F. is for the good of its members and that the secretary is its chief clerk. Information regarding express troubles, questions regarding rates, legislation, etc., if sent to the secretary, will be placed in the hands of the proper committees for action. Such data as this will give a firmer working basis in their investigations. The society can best help you when your wants are made known. The secretary will always be ready to give all the aid possible or else refer your troubles to others who may be of help to you.

In closing, I wish to tender my heartfelt thanks to those friends who have given me so freely of their time and assistance and who by their advice have helped make my work both easier and better.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

[The following is the address delivered by President F. R. Pierson before the Society of American Florists, in convention at Rochester, August 16 to 19, 1910.]

It gives me great pleasure to address you on this occasion, our twenty-sixth annual convention. This convention marks the beginning of the second quarter century in our history. It is very fitting that Rochester, the Flower City, should have been chosen for this convention, for no city in the United States has done more to inculcate the love of horticulture among our people than has Rochester. This city was the cradle of the seed and nursery business of the United States, and has a world-wide reputation for its love of flowers and the beautiful.

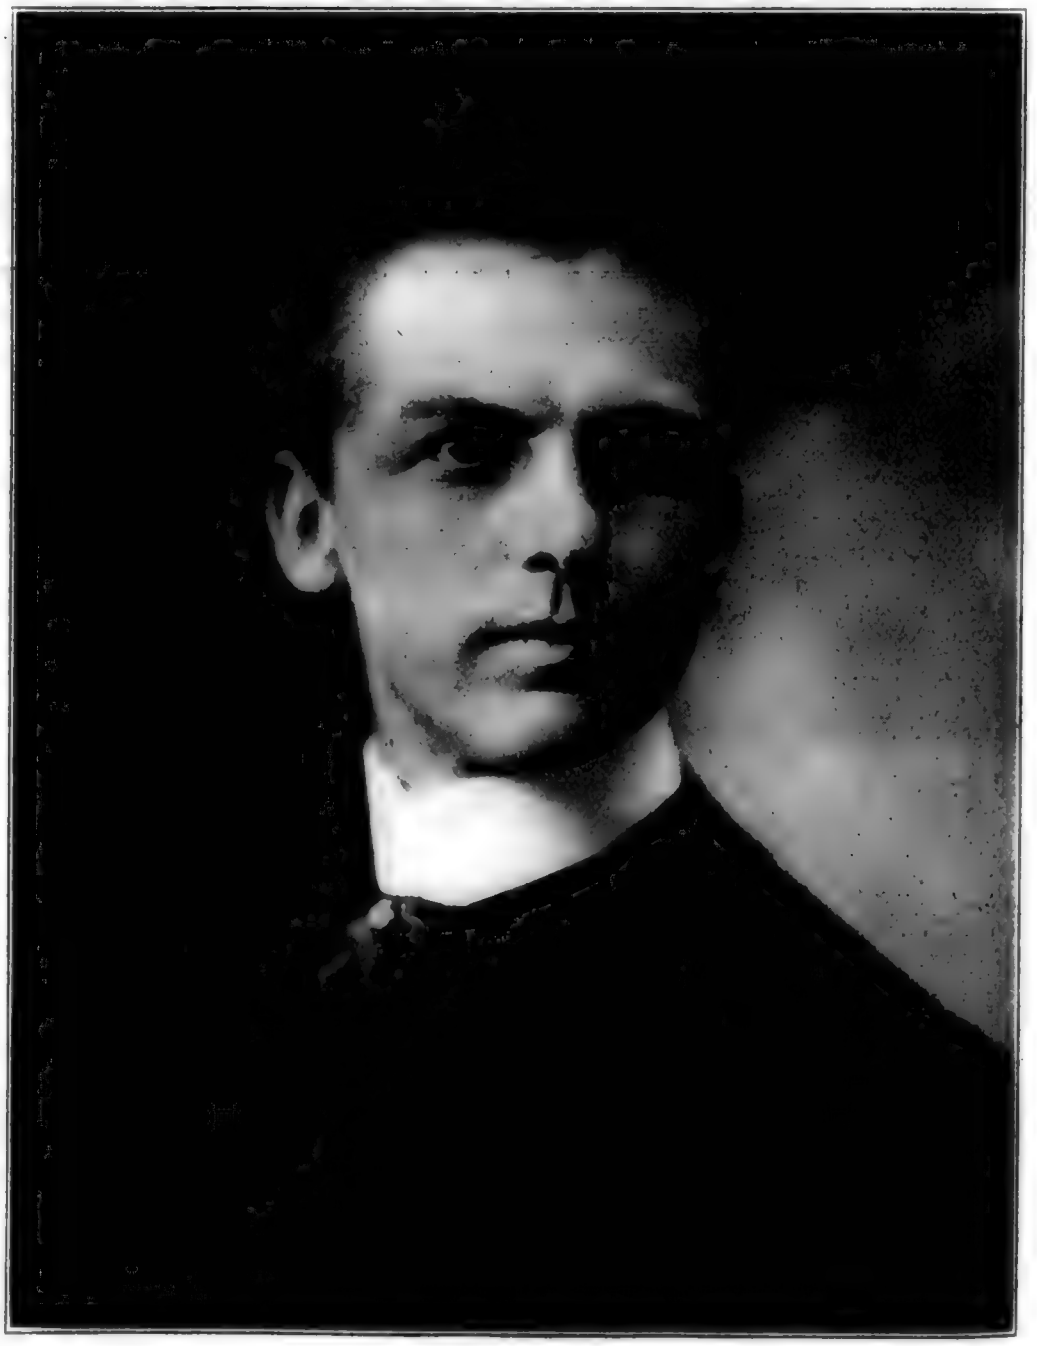
To my mind, one of the most important objects to be accomplished at this time is the incorporation or consolidation of the various societies devoted to special lines of ornamental horticulture into one homogeneous, harmonious whole. By this I do not mean that the different societies, such as the Carnation Society, the Rose Society and the other kindred organizations, should lose their individuality or identity, but that, instead of being separate organizations, they should become sections of the national society, each devoted to its own individual interests, but incorporated into one powerful organization. This is the day of concentration, and now, it seems to me, is the psychological moment for the unification of the different horticultural interests.

Theoretical and Practical Union.

You may ask how this is to be done, and it is a pertinent question. As my friend, Patrick O'Mara, has expressed it, "We need a Moses to lead us out of the wilderness into the promised land." If I remember correctly, this promised land flowed with milk and honey; so it would seem as if the object to be attained was worth striving for. I do not want you to mistake me as expecting to be the Moses to lead you out of the wilderness of the numerous and varied interests represented by the different horticultural societies.

This subject has been uppermost in all our minds for years, and the question of affiliation has been threshed out, and it seems to me as if we might accomplish, in a concrete and practical form, what we have been theorizing about for years, in the midwinter convention, which it is now proposed to hold in connection with the National Flower Show, to be held in Boston next spring, the executive board having recommended that a special meeting of the society be held during the time of the National Flower Show; and I sincerely hope that this recommendation will meet with your approval and be adopted, especially in view of the fact that the American Carnation Society has already fixed that date for holding its annual convention, and the American Rose Society has also agreed upon that date for holding its annual convention, and I trust we may have the coöperation of all the other societies as well.

A General Midwinter Convention.



This is directly in line with what I have in mind at this time as a desirability. In other words, I believe that, instead of having a convention of the Carnation Society in January, a convention of the Rose Society in March, and a meeting of the Sweet Pea Society in the summer, it would be better if these different meetings were held at one time, under the auspices of the Society of American Florists.

This would afford us an opportunity to test the desirability and advisability of such a midwinter convention before committing ourselves definitely to any change of plan. There are a great many arguments that can be advanced in favor of the summer convention, such as we have always held, and there are other arguments in favor of the midwinter convention.

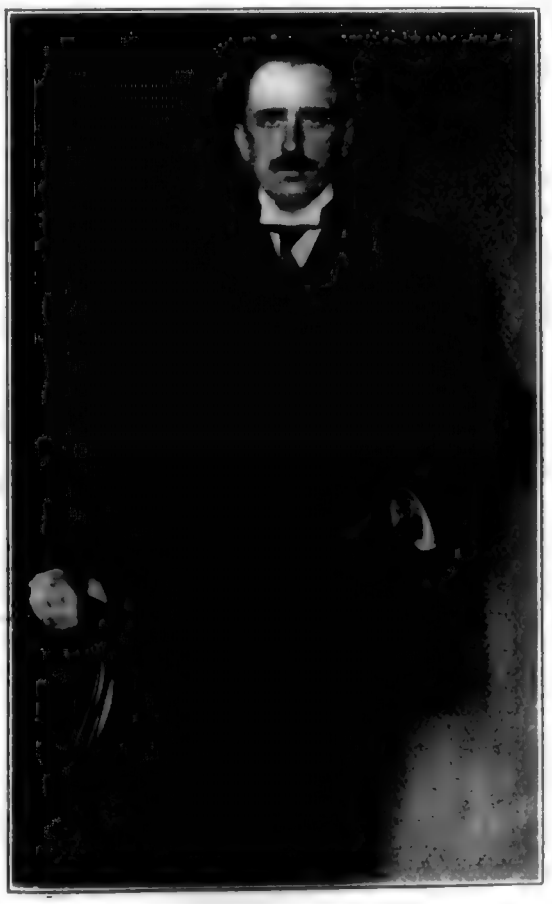
There are some who advocate doing away entirely with the summer convention of the society and substituting a midwinter convention, but at this time I should not want to advocate so radical a change. The secretary was directed to send to each member of the society an inquiry as to whether he would find it more desirable or convenient to attend a summer meeting or a meeting during some month in the spring; so we shall soon have this information available. I do not know why it would not be advantageous for the national society to hold a semi-annual convention instead of an annual convention, as in the past. The summer convention has its advantages for plant exhibits, but gives practically no opportunity for an exhibition of cut flowers of any kind.

To Interest the General Public.

Last year, at Cincinnati, there was considerable discussion as to the desirability of making our exhibitions of such a character as to interest the general public, but on account of lack of room at Rochester, there being so great a demand for space by exhibitors, it was found impossible to carry out that suggestion at this time. There is no doubt but the general public is much interested in our conventions, and it is very desirable that our exhibits should be of such a character as to interest the public and help floriculture generally in the different cities where we gather from time to time. A midwinter convention would offer a magnificent opportunity for this purpose, and I believe that the coming National Flower Show will demonstrate the desirability of a midwinter meeting—possibly not on so elaborate or extensive a scale as will be attempted in Boston next year, but along those general lines.

Edward S. Osborne.
(Chairman Committee on Transportation.)

William T. Fonda.
(Chairman Finance Committee.)



I do not see why our interests are not of enough importance to justify these semiannual gatherings. It certainly would require less of an outlay of both time and money to attend the consolidated semiannual meeting than to attend all the various smaller meetings.

An exhibition in midwinter would also interest the retail section, as it would afford a splendid opportunity for the retail florist to show what can be done in artistic arrangements, and would give him an excellent opportunity of reaching the public in the most effective way. I was particularly pleased to have President Valentine organize a retail section last year. I believe it will conserve the interests of the large number of men who buy and dispose of the products of the growers, and will be productive of great good to the retailer and grower.

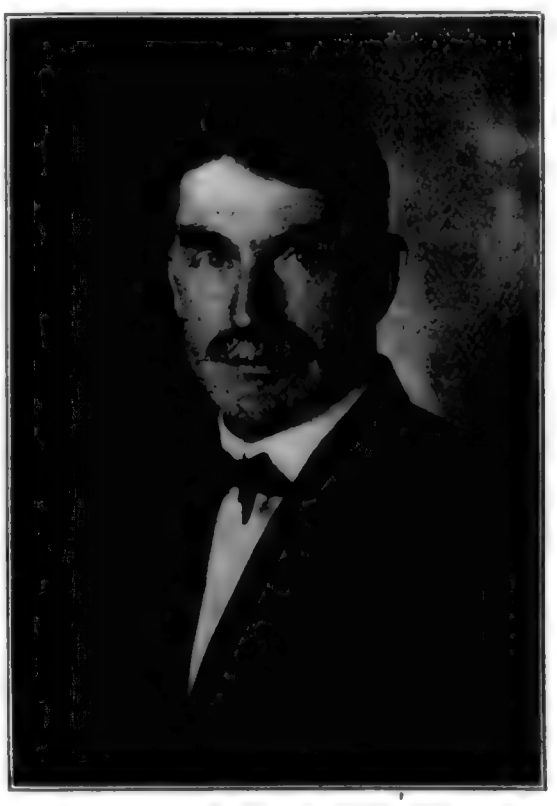
Suggestions About the Secretary.

If an affiliation can be accomplished, I would suggest the desirability of having the secretary of the national society also act as the secretary of all the affiliated societies. I think this would tend to greater efficiency and economy. I would also suggest that the presidents of all the affiliated societies be made members of the board of directors of the S. A. F., thus giving each society a voice in the management of the affairs of the national organization.

Along these lines, it might be apropos for me to mention what I have had in mind for a long time, and that is that our interests are large enough and important enough to justify the employment of a secretary who shall devote his entire time to the advancement of the interests of our society. Our presidents are appointed for only one year, so that it would be desirable to have one executive officer whose term of office should be more or less continuous. We are to have submitted to us at this time an amendment to the constitution relative to the election of a board of directors. I am firmly of the opinion that we would more nearly follow out our ideas of a democratic form of government by the election, rather than by the appointment of directors; in fact, I believe that the offices of the president, vice-president and directors should all be elective, and that the office of the secretary, and possibly of the treasurer, should be appointive. So far as the treasurer is concerned, I am not so insistent that his should be an appointive office; but I believe that the secretary should be appointed by the board of directors, and that his tenure of office should not be subject to any uncertainty as long as he does his work well, and satisfactorily to the board of directors. Constituted as we are as a society, it is desirable that some one should occupy this office who is familiar with the situation and who can give it his entire time and attention. I believe that the extra expense involved would be money well invested.

Will H. Dildine.
(Chairman Badge Committee.)

J. M. Keller.
(Chairman Ball Game Committee.)



New Work For the Secretary.

You may ask what there is to do that requires a man's entire time. Our committees, as now constituted, with one man in one city and another in another city, are unwieldy and unworkable, and are too far apart to do effective work. Those who have served on these committees will bear me out in this statement. Take, for instance, the question of legislation alone. It is becoming necessary that there should be some check upon the various bills that are introduced, both in Congress and in the State Legislatures, many of which in the form in which they are introduced are inimical to our interests. There is also the question of the regulation of express rates, tariff, and other matters requiring constant attention and supervision.

Another matter to which more attention should be given is an increase in the membership of our society. This has been talked of often before, by

To Interest the General Public.

Last year, at Cincinnati, there was considerable discussion as to the desirability of making our exhibitions of such a character as to interest the general public, but on account of lack of room at Rochester, there being so great a demand for space by exhibitors, it was found impossible to carry out that suggestion at this time. There is no doubt but the general public is much interested in our conventions, and it is very desirable that our exhibits should be of such a character as to interest the public and help floriculture generally in the different cities where we gather from time to time. A midwinter convention would offer a magnificent opportunity for this purpose, and I believe that the coming National Flower Show will demonstrate the desirability of a midwinter meeting—possibly not on so elaborate or extensive a scale as will be attempted in Boston next year, but along those general lines

(Chairman Finance Committee.)

I do not see why our interests are not of enough importance to justify these semiannual gatherings. It certainly would require less of an outlay of both time and money to attend the consolidated semiannual meeting than to attend all the various smaller meetings.

An exhibition in midwinter would also interest the retail section, as it would afford a splendid opportunity for the retail florist to show what can be done in artistic arrangements, and would give him an excellent opportunity of reaching the public in the most effective way. I was particularly pleased to have President Valentine organize a retail section last year. I believe it will conserve the interests of the large number of men who buy and dispose of the products of the growers, and will be productive of great good to the retailer and grower.

Suggestions About the Secretary.

If an affiliation can be accomplished, I would suggest the desirability of having the secretary of the national society also act as the secretary of all the affiliated societies. I think this would tend to greater efficiency and economy. I would also suggest that the presidents of all the affiliated societies be made members of the board of directors of the S. A. F., thus giving each society a voice in the management of the affairs of the national organization.

Along these lines, it might be apropos for me to mention what I have had in mind for a long time, and that is that our interests are large enough and important enough to justify the employment of a secretary who shall devote his entire time to the advancement of the interests of our society. Our presidents are appointed for only one year, so that it would be desirable to have one executive officer whose term of office should be more or less continuous. We are to have submitted to us at this time an amendment to the constitution relative to the election of a board of directors. I am firmly of the opinion that we would more nearly follow out our ideas of a democratic form of government by the election, rather than by the appointment of directors; in fact, I believe that the offices of the president, vice-president and directors should all be elective, and that the office of the secretary, and possibly of the treasurer, should be appointive. So far as the treasurer is concerned, I am not so insistent that his should be an appointive office; but I believe that the secretary should be appointed by the board of directors, and that his tenure of office should not be subject to any uncertainty as long as he does his work well, and satisfactorily to the board of directors. Constituted as we are as a society, it is desirable that some one should occupy this office who is familiar with the situation and who can give it his entire time and attention. I believe that the extra expense involved would be money well invested.

New Work For the Secretary.

You may ask what there is to do that requires a man's entire time. Our committees, as now constituted, with one man in one city and another in another city, are unwieldy and unworkable, and are too far apart to do effective work. Those who have served on these committees will bear me out in this statement. Take, for instance, the question of legislation alone. It is becoming necessary that there should be some check upon the various bills that are introduced, both in Congress and in the State Legislatures, many of which in the form in which they are introduced are inimical to our interests. There is also the question of the regulation of express rates, tariff, and other matters requiring constant attention and supervision.

Another matter to which more attention should be given is an increase in the membership of our society. This has been talked of often before, by Nathan R. Graves.

(Souvenir Album Committee.)

Colin B. Ogsten.
(Chairman Ladies' Entertainment Committee.)

many presidents who have preceded me, and, while a great deal has been accomplished in the past by those who have occupied this office, we all admit that we do not have as many members in our society as we should have. There are many who do not fully realize what a great benefit the Society of American Florists really is, and what good a society of earnest workers can accomplish with the proper support. I believe it is the duty of every man in the business to belong to our national organization.

Life Fee and Annual Dues.

In regard to the recommendation of the executive committee fixing the life membership fee at $50, I expressed myself at length on this subject at the last convention. I believe that $50 is none too much for a life membership in our national organization. Many local clubs and smaller societies charge as much as this, or more. The right way to succeed is not to cheapen the life membership, but to increase the value of the organization, so that a man will be willing to pay almost any price for membership in the society.

Further, I believe that the annual dues might well be increased from $3 to $5. It seems to me that $5 is little enough for a membership in our society. Now, every member attending a convention gets more than $5 worth of entertainment alone, to say nothing about the other benefits derived therefrom. A member of the society who pays his annual dues of $5 for ten years consecutively might be made a life member, allowing the payment of further dues to cease. I think that an inducement such as this would prevent a great many from allowing their membership to lapse, as has been the case frequently in the past.

I would also recommend for your consideration that any member of the society, to be eligible to the presidency, should have first served on the board of directors. My reason for this is that such a man, if elected to the presidency, would have familiarized himself with the detail work of the society and would, consequently, be better equipped to act as the chief executive officer of the society.

The National Flower Show.

I wish to call the attention of the members to the most important event of the year, namely, the organization of the National Flower Show, which is to be held in Boston next spring. A guarantee fund of over $10,000 has been raised; Mechanics Hall—the finest hall in the city of Boston—has been leased; a manager and secretary have been engaged, and everything points to a successful show.

The first national flower show was a great success, but the second, which is to be held in Boston next spring, is the most ambitious project that has ever been attempted in this country, and I believe that every live florist should endeavor to attend this exhibition, as it undoubtedly will be the finest show of flowering plants that has ever been gathered together in the United States at one time. No effort will be spared to make this a magnificent exhibition. Premiums aggregating over $10,000 will be offered. There is no place in the country where such a magnificent collection of plants can be gathered as in the vicinity of Boston, and I ask the hearty support of every member of the national organization to make this exhibition a red letter day in the annals of horticulture in this country.

I have to congratulate the society on the splendid exhibition in Convention hall at this time. The value of these trade exhibits to the society cannot be overestimated, as they are of great educational, as well as financial, benefit. I want to express to the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Rochester at this time, on behalf of the Society of American Florists, our appreciation of the magnificent building which has been tendered to the society without cost. I think you will all agree with me that we have never had finer facilities at any of our conventions.

I wish, also, to congratulate the society on the splendid attendance at this convention. The vice-presidents should be commended for the splendid work that they have done in bringing here such a large representation as we see here today.

In conclusion, let me urge every member of the society to feel that our future success depends, not so much upon the officers elected from time to time, as upon the individual effort of each member. Looking back over the last twenty-five years of horticulture in this country, one cannot help but feel proud of the progress that has been made in our profession; and amid such auspicious circumstances as we find surrounding us today, we should be inspired to greater effort, that the history of the next quarter century may record even greater progress.

CANADIAN FLORISTS MEET.

Officers Elected.

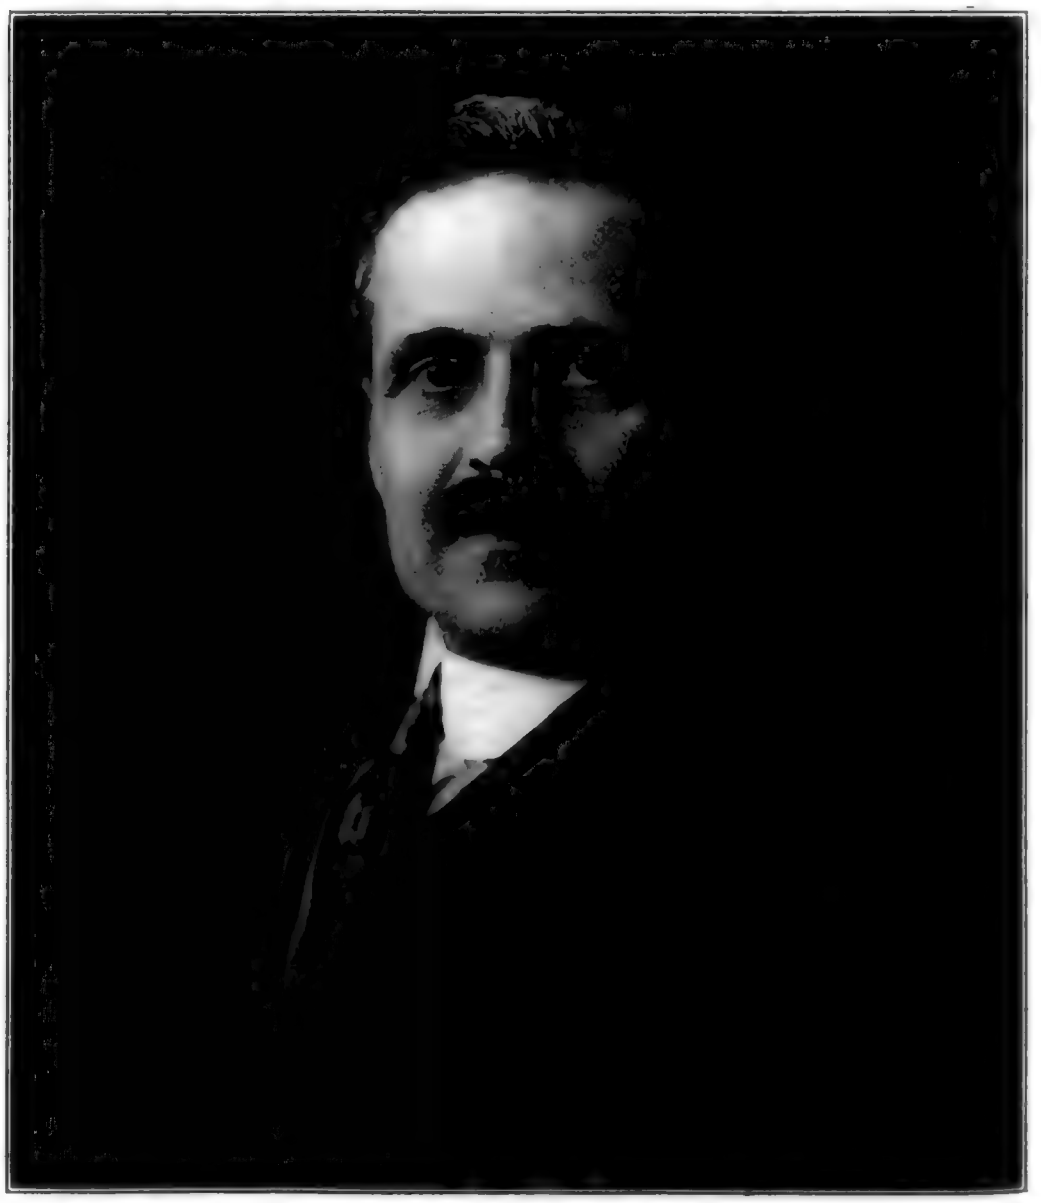
At its successful thirteenth annual convention, held at St. Catherines, Ont., August 10 to 12, the Canadian Horticultural Association elected the following officers for the ensuing year:

President — J. Connon, Hamilton, Ont.

First vice-president—Alfred Wilshire, Montreal, Que.

Second vice-president—R. L. Dunn, St. Catherines, Ont.

Secretary—W. C. Hall, Montreal, Que.



Treasurer—C. H. Janzen, Berlin, Ont.

Executive committee—H. B. Cowan, Peterboro; Walter Muston, Davisville; H. J. Mepstead, Ottawa.

Member nomenclature committee—Wm. Hunt, Guelph.

The Tariff.

A large part of the time of the convention was taken up by the discussion of the Canadian tariff on stock imported by florists, and of the regulations regarding the inspection of nursery stock and plants. In the matter of rates of duty the secretary had sent each member a blank, asking him to write down his views covering each article. With the replies as a basis, the committee had sought to average the opinion and had prepared a schedule recommending that cut flowers, greens (smilax and asparagus), rose plants, carnations and cuttings, bedding plants, stove plants, ferns, cannas and gladioli,

F. J. Keller.
(Chairman Committee on Decorations.)

hardy perennials and flower pots, pay a duty of twenty per cent; that laurel, magnolia, salix, palms, rhododendrons, azaleas, box, bays, aquatics, cacti, bulbs, Dutch and French; tuberous begonias, liliums and orchids be admitted free of duty.

The report provoked a long discussion, in which the usual divergent ideas were expressed. On coming to a vote, a motion to put cut flowers on the free list was lost, all the growers voting against it. The committee's schedule was then taken up item by item. Greens were put at seventeen and one-half per cent. The only change made was to put hardy perennials on the free list. The vote on palms was twenty-four to two in favor of admitting them free.

The report as amended was adopted, and James McKenna, T. Manton, T. W. Duggan and Arthur Armandale were deputed to place the matter before the minister of customs, with a view to having the tariff amended accordingly. H. J. Mepstead was named as convenor of the committee.

As to the regulations surrounding the importation and inspection of nursery stock and plants, many instances of the hardships resulting were mentioned, and an extra session was held, at which Dr. Hewitt, the officer in charge, was present and a better understanding was arrived at.

A resolution was adopted that the convention is of opinion that all greenhouse plants and bulbs should be exempt from the Inspection and Fumigation Act, and should be allowed to come in at any season of the year; and that Montreal should be a port of entry; and that the minister of agriculture be approached on the subject.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business is still in the grasp of summer dullness and is expected to remain so for a few more weeks. There is little change from the reports of last week as to stock.

Field-grown carnations are beginning to come in, but only in limited quantities. Roses are about as they have been, a few good Beauties, Kaiserin and Killarney coming in. Gladioli are not as fancy as they were and not at all overstocked. The everblooming single tuberose stalks are now beginning to come from the Kirkwood growers. The market opened on them at $5 per hundred, but they are now down to $4. All are well supplied with giganteum lilies, which sell well at $10 per hundred.

Extra good asters are scarce, but the market is crowded with poor stock in white, pink and purple, which rarely brings over $1 per hundred. At the leading retail establishments they say things have been mighty dull all summer, and that funeral work alone kept them going, but we are looking forward to a busy fall and winter season.

Club Meeting.

The regular meeting of the St. Louis Florists' Club was held in the Odd Fellows' building, Thursday, August 11, with a fair attendance. The principal interest attached to the election of officers, which resulted as follows: President, John Connon; vice-president, Frank H. Weber; secretary, J. J. Beneke; treasurer, William C. Smith; 3-year term trustee, E. W. Guy.

The trustees reported that the recent picnic was a complete success, inasmuch as all the bills had been paid without exceeding the appropriation made by the club for that purpose. The secretary stated that the invitation to the S. A. F. to meet in St. Louis in 1911 had been forwarded to Secretary Dorner. Edward Kelley, of the Kelley Floral Co., was elected to membership.

An invitation was received, and accepted, from Frank H. Weber to hold the next meeting at the home of the H. J. Weber & Sons Nursery Co., Thursday, September 8. The ladies were also asked to come.

Various Notes.

Werner & Bro., of Clayton, are cut ting a nice lot of Killarney roses, also a fine lot of giganteum lilies. George Schmidt has been engaged by them as a rose grower.

The Schmaus brothers, of Paducah, Ky., who spent several days here last week, made the rounds visiting in their big automobile and left for home much pleased with their trip.

Mrs. J. Austin Shaw left last week to meet her husband in Rochester. Their daughter, Mrs. Noel, has fully recovered from her sickness and is spending the rest of the summer up north.

A. G. Greiner, the local cactus specialist, on Natural Bridge road, is attracting a great deal of attention with his fine display of cacti in the front of his place. He reports that he will soon build a large cactus house, owing to his great increase of business.

Dan Cupid stole into the hearts of two prominent young folks in the trade last week. Great surprise was expressed by their many friends in the trade when the marriage of Fred C. Weber, Jr., to Miss Minette L. Beyer was announced. The happy young couple are spending their honeymoon at Atlantic City, N. J.

Adolph Brix, of the Brix Floral Co., says that he has had a splendid summer business with funeral work and will not be able to take any vacation this summer.

A. J. Bentzen has removed from his residence on Marcus avenue and will hereafter live over the retail store, at 3117 North Grand avenue. John Bentzen, the buyer in the wholesale district, says trade continues good.

Charles Schoenle and George Angermueller were to have gone on a week's fishing trip, but, owing to the illness of Mr. Schoenle, the trip was postponed until sometime next week.

Any of the local trade wishing any of the photographs of the recent picnic can be supplied at the wholesale house of the W. C. Smith Wholesale Floral Co.

Henry Berning has leased the store one door west of his present quarters. Arches will be broken through, which will give him much needed room all on one floor.

George Angermueller is contemplating taking in the upper floor of his present quarters, which will be fitted up for offices and supply room. The ground floor is to be used only for cut flowers.

C. A. Kuehn's three large floors are being looked over and restocked for the coming season. The wire department on the third floor is working full time.

The W. C. Smith Wholesale Floral Co. is still in the midst of reconstruction. The wire shop will be in the rear of the second floor and the main office in front.

Belleville was well represented at the club meeting, Thursday, August 11. There were present E. W. Guy, A. S. Halstead, Henry Emunds and Gus W. Grossart.

The Shaw banquet at the Southern hotel last week was well attended by the local trade. The decorations of the tables consisted of white and pink asters. Prof. William Trelease was the toastmaster of the evening. All the delegates to the apple growers' meeting were in attendance. The Florists' Club was represented by President George B. Windler, President-elect John Connon, J. F. Ammann, E. W. Guy, W. C. Smith, Charles Schoenle, Frank Weber, J. M. Walther, C. Bergstermann, Emil Schray, F. J. Fillmore, H. C. Irish and J. J. Beneke. The Horticultural Society was represented by Otto G. Koenig, F. H. Meinhardt and Andrew Meyer. Max Herzog, Charles Fulgraf and G. H. Pring were also in attendance. It was an enjoyable evening for all.

The St. Louis visitors to the S. A. F. convention left here Monday, August 15, over the Big Four railroad at 1 p. m. The following were seated in the special when the train pulled out: Mr. and Mrs. Henry Berning, E. W. Guy and daughter, Alex. Waldbart, E. J. Waldbart, William Osseck, Otto Koenig, Mr. and Mrs. F. H. BOSTON.

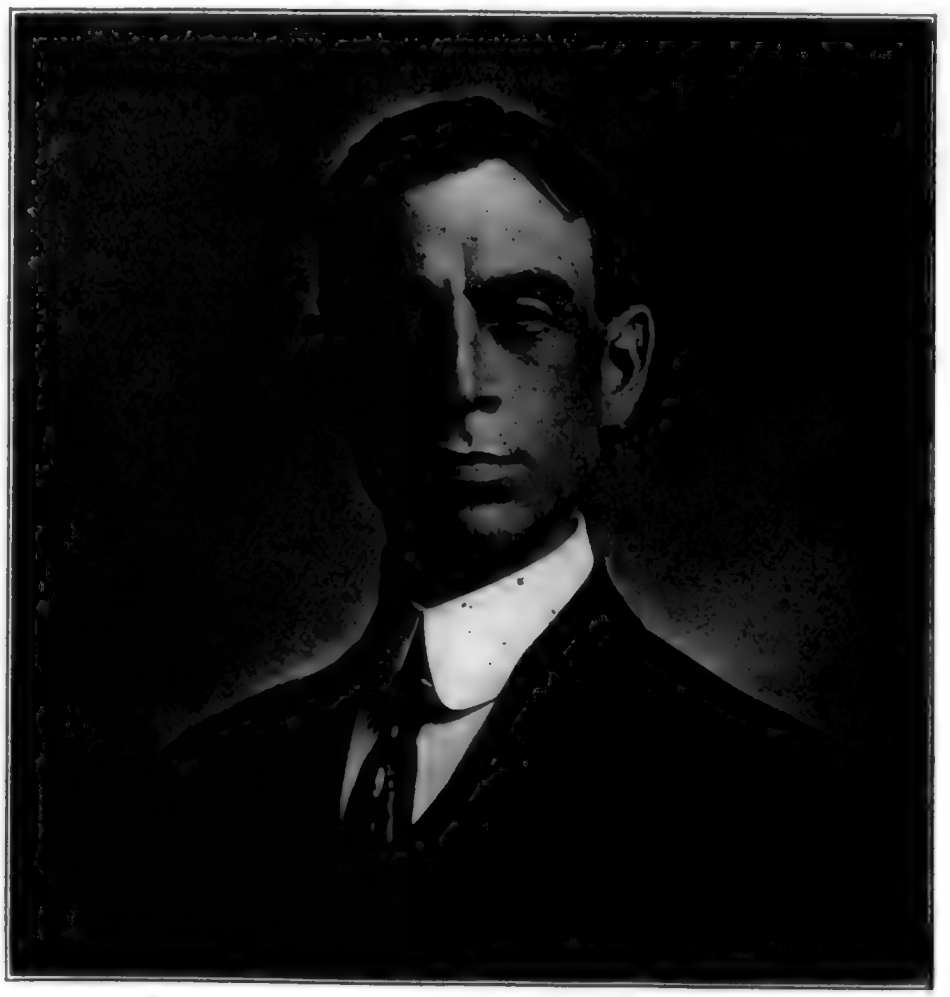
The Market.

There is no great change in the cut flower market. If anything, business was a little improved last week, the shipping trade to seaside resorts being better. In the way of roses, Kaiserin are extra good and meeting with a fair sale, also Carnot. The majority of the Killarney are rather small. Not many Beauties are seen, but some My Maryland are coming in. Quite a few small sized flowers are hard to move. Carnations are nearly down and out. The old crop is practically finished, and what blooms arrive are small. A few outdoor-grown flowers are seen, and some of the new crop is about due.

Asters are growing in quantity and improving in quality. While the majority are Queen of the Market, some of the Comet and Ostrich Plume section are also coming in. Values on these have declined. Lily of the valley shows rather more life and has met with quite a good sale of late. Of lilies there is an abundant supply, not only in longiflorums, but auratums and speciosums, both white and rose. The two latter do not sell well. Gladioli are abundant and of good quality, but do not meet with a ready sale; neither do cosmos and the variety of other outdoor annuals now arriving. Supplies of green stock are ample, but the demand at present is not heavy.



Various Notes.

The Boston visitors to the S. A. F convention at Rochester left in two special cars via the Boston and Albany railroad, August 15 at 10 a. m. It was both a substantial and jolly crowd, the largest Boston has sent to a convention for many years. Evidences were abundant that there would be unlimited jollity on the journey, and anyone coming in contact with them would have no doubt of where the party hailed from, any more than any conventionists at Rochester would do. Great praise is due E. Allan Peirce, state vice-president, for his strenuous work to secure a substantial delegation. He threw both time and money into it, and the results must be particularly pleasing to him. The Boston train stopped at Worcester, Palmer, Springfield and Pittsfield, where other conventionists were picked up.

Robert Cameron returned from Bar Harbor, Me., August 15. His stay was briefer than intended, as extensive changes in the greenhouses at Harvard Botanic Gardens are being made or are in immediate prospect.

A. G. Lake, of Wellesley Hills, has his usual grand field of asters, which are among the finest to be seen in Massachusetts.

F. W. Robinson, who was with

E. Fred Rowe.
(Chairman Press and Printing Committee.)

Peirce Bros., of Waltham, for a number of years and received his first automobile training there, is now private chauffeur to President Taft at Beverly, Mass.

The American Sweet Pea Society will, it is hoped, hold its next summer show in Boston about the middle of July, when a fine display will undoubtedly be forthcoming.

Edgar Bros., of Waverley, have their houses filled with mums, which are looking extra well. Their new house is a fine, light structure, which should grow excellent stock. W. N. Craig.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

Last week the market was better supplied than for some time past. Gladioli and asters came in heavily and there also were more Easter lilies and roses.

Business, outside of funeral work, was quiet and, were it not for the good shipping trade, quite a bit of stock would have been left in the first part of the week; the end of the week, however, found a brisk demand locally for stock to turn out funeral work.

Club Meeting.

At the regular Florists' Club meeting, August 4, the entertainment committee announced that the annual basket picnic, which will be more of a private affair than in former seasons, will take place Sunday, September 4, at Boutzlaff's grove. Many valuable prizes for the different lines of entertainment have been donated by various club members.

The executive committee of the coming fall flower show reported that the show will be held from November 7 to 13, inclusive, at the Auditorium hall. Prizes to the amount of $3,500 will be awarded.

Various Notes.

James Chacona, who for many years has conducted a candy and flower store on Wisconsin street, is about to return to his native home in Greece. J. P. Sharer has acquired Mr. Chacona's interests.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Hess and niece, of Omaha, Neb., spent a few days last week looking about our city.

Mr. Desmond, store manager of the L. S. Donaldson Co. at Minneapolis, Minn., who was on his way to Chicago, spent Sunday in our midst. He called attention to the first great fall show to be held at Minneapolis, November 16 to 20.

Mrs. Smith, mother of W. C. Smith, St. Louis, Mo., is making an extended visit with her daughter, Mrs. H. V. Hunkel, in this city.

Fred W. Mueller, of the Mueller & Schroeder Co., participated in the Knights Templar conclave at Chicago; he pronounced it simply grand.

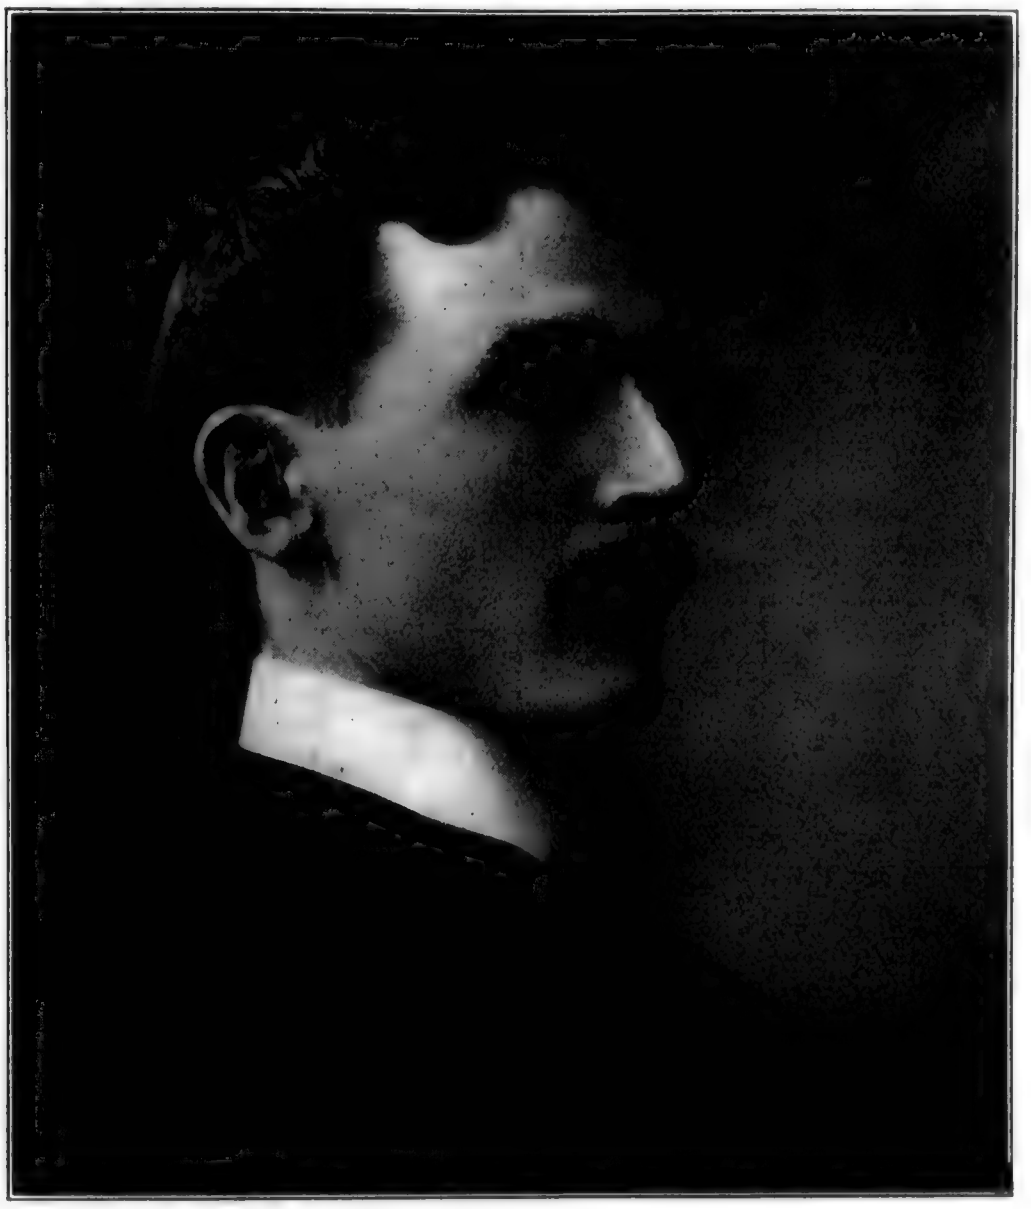
In a recent announcement of the engagement of Gust Mueller, of the Mueller & Schroeder Co., the fiancee's name should have read Miss Ruby Eimer, not Eisner.

After resting up at Pewaukee lake, Miss Zimmermann is again on duty at the Will Zimmermann store at Fifth street and Grand avenue.

From reports, all the North Milwaukee carnation growers finished housing their field-grown plants by August 15. Owing to the dry season, plants are not as large as in former seasons and some red spider is in evidence. These will be short-lived, though, when once they are within the four walls.

Visitors during the week were John Benstead, Racine, Wis., and C. B. Tremain, Hartford, Wis.

The large new refrigerator at the Holton & Hunkel store was completed last week and they now have better facilities than ever before for meeting the always increasing cut flower trade.



Mr. and Mrs. August F. Kellner and children moved to their summer home on Okanchee lake August 6.

The Milwaukee representation at the S. A. F. convention at Rochester this week is unusually light. The following left with the Chicago boys on Monday: Nic Zweifel, Gust Mueller and H. W. Koerner. Owing to sickness in the family, Fred W. Holton, who worked hard trying to induce everybody he met to go to Rochester, was at the last moment prevented from attending.

C. C. Pollworth, who seldom fails to attend any convention, found that there was so much work which commanded his personal attention that, although he hoped up to the last moment that he might get away, he was forced to stay at home. The C. C. Pollworth Co. says that the call for Formosa lilies is away ahead of that for Harrisii. This company received its first carload last week.

Roy Currie, of Currie Bros., returned Monday, August 15, from a two weeks' vacation at Army lake. He spent most of his time canoeing, fishing, etc. He says they were so busy with funeral work upon his return that it was the same old song, "Dig in."

The Holton & Hunkel Co. is receiving a fine lot of Beauties from their Brown Deer range. E. O.

LILIES FOR SUMMER.

What kind of a white lily is considered best for planting out in the field for summer bloom here in Tennessee?

M. E. H.

Lilium speciosum album would be the most useful variety for you. Plant the bulbs in November or December nine inches deep. Lilium longiflorum, Japanese grown, if planted early in the spring will be a good variety to precede the speciosums. C. W.

GLADIOLUS BRENCHLEYENSIS.

Regarding the introduction to commerce of Gladiolus Brenchleyensis, George Bunyard, of the Royal Nurseries, Maidstone, England, writes to the Gardeners' Chronicle to say that he noticed a statement recently to the effect that inquiries have been made respecting the origin of the variety at the village of Brenchley in Kent, but no particulars could be gleaned: "In reference to your note as to origin of this gladiolus, allow me to say that over fifty years back, my father purchased bulbs from the raiser, a Mr. Hooker, of Brenchley, Kent, who raised it from Gandavensis. I can well recollect selling them at 2s 6d each. We raised a big stock the same year. Mr. Youell, of Yarmouth, called on his round, and we sold him a quantity, which, in his sandy soil, soon enabled him to flood the country with it."

ting a nice lot of Killarney roses, also a fine lot of giganteum lilies. George Schmidt has been engaged by them as a rose grower.

The Schmaus brothers, of Paducah, Ky., who spent several days here last week, made the rounds visiting in their big automobile and left for home much pleased with their trip.

Mrs. J. Austin Shaw left last week to meet her husband in Rochester. Their daughter, Mrs. Noel, has fully recovered from her sickness and is spending the rest of the summer up north.

A. G. Greiner, the local cactus specialist, on Natural Bridge road, is attracting a great deal of attention with his fine display of cacti in the front of his place. He reports that he will soon build a large cactus house, owing to his great increase of business.

Dan Cupid stole into the hearts of two prominent young folks in the trade last week. Great surprise was expressed by their many friends in the trade when the marriage of Fred C. Weber, Jr., to Miss Minette L. Beyer was announced. The happy young couple are spending their honeymoon at Atlantic City, N. J.

Adolph Brix, of the Brix Floral Co., says that he has had a splendid summer business with funeral work and will not be able to take any vacation this summer.

A. J. Bentzen has removed from his residence on Marcus avenue and will hereafter live over the retail store, at 3117 North Grand avenue. John Bentzen, the buyer in the wholesale district, says trade continues good.

Charles Schoenle and George Angermueller were to have gone on a week's fishing trip, but, owing to the illness of Mr. Schoenle, the trip was postponed until sometime next week.

Any of the local trade wishing any of the photographs of the recent picnic can be supplied at the wholesale house of the W. C. Smith Wholesale Floral Co.

Henry Berning has leased the store one door west of his present quarters. Arches will be broken through, which will give him much needed room all on one floor.

George Angermueller is contemplating taking in the upper floor of his present quarters, which will be fitted up for offices and supply room. The ground floor is to be used only for cut flowers.

C. A. Kuehn's three large floors are being looked over and restocked for the coming season. The wire department on the third floor is working full time.

The W. C. Smith Wholesale Floral Co. is still in the midst of reconstruction. The wire shop will be in the rear of the second floor and the main office in front.

Belleville was well represented at the club meeting, Thursday, August 11. There were present E. W. Guy, A. S. Halstead, Henry Emunds and Gus W. Grossart.

The Shaw banquet at the Southern hotel last week was well attended by the local trade. The decorations of the tables consisted of white and pink asters. Prof. William Trelease was the toastmaster of the evening. All the delegates to the apple growers' meeting were in attendance. The Florists' Club was represented by President George B. Windler, President-elect John Connon, J. F. Ammann, E. W. Guy, W. C. Smith, Charles Schoenle, Frank Weber, J. M. Walther, C. Bergstermann, Emil Schray, F. J. Fillmore, H. C. Irish and J. J. Beneke. The Horticultural Society was represented by Otto G. Koenig, F. H. Meinhardt and Andrew Meyer. Max Herzog, Charles Fulgraf and G. H. Pring were also in attendance. It was an enjoyable evening for all.

The St. Louis visitors to the S. A. F. convention left here Monday, August 15, over the Big Four railroad at 1 p. m. The following were seated in the special when the train pulled out: Mr. and Mrs. Henry Berning, E. W. Guy and daughter, Alex. Waldbart, E. J. Waldbart, William Osseck, Otto Koenig, Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Quincy, Mass.—It is said that Percy Green, the proprietor of the Monatiquot Greenhouses, has made a hit with the young ladies employed in the office of the Fore River Co. by offering to give them all the sweet peas they chose to pick in his houses. The offer was to be good indefinitely.

East Bridgewater, Mass.—John K. Alexander, proprietor of the East Bridgewater Dahlia Gardens, has twenty-five acres of dahlias and over 250,000 gladioli set out this season and the crop is of splendid quality. He will compete for prizes in the fall at all the large fairs in this vicinity. Last year he carried off many prizes.

RESULTS THAT COUNT.

Many factors have influenced advertisers, but they steadily are coming to buy advertising on the same basis that they buy other commodities—on the basis of worth.

We were more than pleased with our ad. in The Review. We had more orders from it than we had stock. The Review is certainly a humdinger to get business.—W. J. Miller & Son, Pontiac, Ill., August 8, 1910.

I am completely sold out of stock, thanks to your efficient advertising medium.—R. H. McKerr, Canandaigua, N. Y., August 8, 1910.

Practically everyone whose trade is worth going after reads The Review.

PROFITS IN EXPRESS.

That the four great express companies get net returns of from forty-three to 115 per cent or more on the capital employed in actual express operation is stated in a report issued by the Merchants' Association of New York. The report, prepared by Frederick B. De Berard, deals in detail with the resources and operations of the Adams, American, United States, and Wells-Fargo companies. The conclusion is reached that the greater part of the assets of express companies are devoted to investment and that the capital actually employed in the express business is little more than the value of the equipment plus a moderate working fund. Some idea of the operations of express companies may be gained from the following figures:

	Total assets.	Assets in express.	Net income all sources
Adams	$20,455,587	$3,886,035	$2,661,243
American	45,864,667	1,716,004	3,276,352
United States.	15,345,027	1,894,802	893,035
Wells-Fargo .	87,888,662	4,488,452	4,664,379

RESULTS.
We give them. You get them.
We both have them.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

Last week's market did not fulfill its earlier promise. The week having started off excellently, it was hoped that the business had taken a permanent upturn, but the latter part of the period covered by the Knights Templar conclave saw a considerable reduction in the local demand, some falling off in shipping orders, and a considerable increase in the supply of stock, particularly asters and gladioli. Probably the decrease in demand from out of town was due to the local crops of the same flowers, which began to pile up in Chicago. The opening of the present week has brought no special activity. Convention week never is better than quiet. Too many people are away from home; the hustlers for business among the retailers are the ones who attend conventions, in a great majority of cases.

The market is now well supplied with all seasonable flowers. Asters are coming in heavily in all the colors. The increase in supplies has made it possible to fill all orders with a fair grade of stock, though the greater part of the asters still run poor. The demand continues to be for the best grades. The extra fancies are bringing good prices, with fair values for the medium grades, but scarcely any value for the open-centered, short-stemmed, small and generally unsalable flowers.

The receipts of gladioli have increased almost as rapidly as the receipts of asters. It is not possible to do much with the common run of glads, but America is selling well, with such bright reds as Mrs. King also moving satisfactorily. Augusta continues in too large supply to bring the price it otherwise would command. It does not pay to ship anything but the three self colors to this market.

Some reduction in the demand for Beauties is apparent, but the best stock still cleans up promptly at average summer prices. Supplies of My Maryland are larger than heretofore and some of the stock has stems of good length. The variety is now competing successfully with Killarney, and White Killarney does not sell so long as Kaiserin is obtainable. There is little call for Richmond. The varieties mentioned are the principal stock in trade today, though smaller quantities of some half dozen other roses can be supplied on orders. There are now enough roses for all demands. Short stock from new plants is overabundant; the good stems come from houses run especially for summer.

Both Easter lilies and auratums are abundant. There is sufficient valley. Cattleyas are scarce. A few Shasta daisies still come in and sell fairly well. The summer flowers meet with the usual sale.

There are considerable receipts of Golden Glow chrysanthemums and the quality in several instances is extremely good, but the same cannot be said for the demand. It really looks as though there is little use for mums in hot weather and the prediction is freely made in the market that not so many will be grown for summer another season.

. . . THE TWO . . .

Killarneys

White and Pink—in Good Crop

Our Pink Killarneys are known far and wide as the finest roses that come into the Chicago market. The White Killarneys are from the same growers, and have the same quality. We never had nicer, cleaner summer Killarneys than this year. Try them and see for yourself. Send an order today.

ASTERS! ASTERS!!

We are receiving as fine Asters as can be found anywhere in this part of the country. The demand for the best is so brisk that buyers who want the choicest are advised to order as early as possible. Plenty of medium and small Asters in all colors—can fill orders in quantity without notice.

Beauties

There are no better Beauties than those we are shipping, and the cut is mostly medium stems, the length most in demand at this season. We invite all buyers in search of a dependable supply of thoroughly satisfactory Beauties to send their orders to us.

Lilies

We can furnish fancy Easter Lilies in quantity every day in the year. The supply is large at present. $10 per 100.

Valley

Fancy Valley always on hand, elegant stock—the Chicago Market Brand—a single bunch or thousand lots, it's here for you.

Gladioli

We are headquarters for FANCY Glads. Augusta, white, the variety everybody can use in quantity every day, is in very large supply; also good supply of Mrs. Francis King, best red, and America. Use these and it will bring trade to your store.

Summer Stock

We can supply any flower in season. Order of us.

Greens

Headquarters for Farleyense, Adiantum, Smilax, Asparagus bunches.

Visitors Are Invited

Members of the trade visiting Chicago are invited to make our store their headquarters—use our desks, our telephones and our conveniences—have your mail addressed in our care.

The green goods market is quiet. There is an abundance of everything.

Various Notes.

Joseph Straus, with the A. L. Randall Co., reports that the retailers are much hampered by the rules of the elevated railroad companies, prohibiting passengers with large bundles passing through the gates. The florists seldom use the transportation lines to carry home stock during the rush hours; trade demands are otherwise.

The repairing of the Flower Growers' Market building is progressing so slowly that some of the stand-holders are becoming impatient.

John Michelsen, of Amling's, with his family, is vacationing at the lakes in the vicinity of McHenry, Ill.

Harry Lubliner, of Lubliner & Trinz, says the summer has seemed short because there has been so good a supply of stock, making business possible.

Miss Gunterberg is handling the stock of Sinner Bros., reciprocating during John Sinner's absence for his care of her own supplies during her vacation.

Gus Lange and family have returned from their visit at Omaha.

A. H. Budlong has been at Lake Geneva for several days. Miss Nelda Wolf, who keeps the J. A. Budlong books, has spent a part of her vacation at the Budlong cottage at the lake.

Phil Schupp says buyers now prefer My Maryland to other pink roses.

L. R. Bohannon is fishing at Sister Lakes and Crooked Lake.

Fred Sperry, of Vaughan & Sperry, with his family, is looked for this week, returning from an outing at Minneapolis.

Henry Wehrman, at Maywood, has five houses planted to mums, which he will follow with sweet peas. Mr. Wehrman was the pioneer grower of winter-flowering sweet peas for this market and much of the present popularity of these flowers is due to his persistency when the demand was small.

B. Abrahamson is now exploiting his auto delivery service for florists.

Peter Reinberg is progressing rapidly with the planting of his carnation houses. The rose cut is light, but considerable quantities of Beauties are received.

George Pieser is no longer with Zech & Mann.

F. F. Benthey, with Kyle & Foerster, who is the oldest man in the market, says he never has seen a summer when business has been so good, or so steady, or when supplies of stock have been so large.

E. B. Washburn, now the picture of health, is spending a part of each day in the office of Bassett & Washburn. The rest of the time he keeps in touch with affairs at the greenhouses.

E. F. Winterson says that never since he has been in business has the cut flower trade been so good in summer as has been the case this year. In the seed store French bulbs are in and Dutch stock is expected soon.

Ernst Amling, son of Albert F. Amling, has put up a range of about 18,000 feet of glass at Maywood, planted to Beauties, and is about ready to cut. His uncle, E. C. Amling, says he has high hopes for the young man's success in the business.

Mike Fink, of Kennicott Bros. Co., is spending his vacation at the S. A. F. convention. G. H. Pieser also is away this week.

Miss Sadie Heim, daughter of Edward Heim, of Blue Island, operates the new telephone switchboard at E. H. Hunt's. The new telephone call is Randolph 4336.

N. J. Wietor states that with Wietor Bros. pink roses next season will consist of 25,000 Killarney, 15,000 Jardine and 10,000 Uncle John. Maid has been dropped. For white 20,000 White Killarney and 9,000 Bride have been planted.

Wendland & Keimel are rapidly completing a new brick stack ninety feet high, with an inside diameter of four and one-half feet. The stack is planned to take care of a considerable increase in glass.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. is adding largely to the importance of its orchid department. Several thousand freshly collected cattleyas have recently arrived and have been potted up. It is the intention to be able to maintain a constant supply.

D. L. Harris, manager for the Pulverized Manure Co., says it keeps him humping to get enough raw material to fill the orders that are pouring in; in fact, he says they are simply swamped with business.

H. N. Bruns is one of the many florists who have found the sale of goldfish a decidedly profitable side line. He has a large aquarium filled with fish in his store window and he finds that Visitors.

John H. Dunlop, of Toronto, was a prominent figure at last week's Knights Templar conclave. He is high up in Masonry. You might address him as Right Eminent Sir John H. Dunlop, Past Grand Registrar, Sovereign Great Priory of Canada. He also is Past Preceptor Cyrene Preceptory No. 29, K. T. G. R. C., and a lot of other things.

Wm. F. Gude, of Washington, D. C., who also is up at the top, was another conclave visitor.

Herbert Graham Walker, of F. Walker & Co., Louisville, was in attendance at the conclave.

Other visitors included R. A. Scott, of Wm. Scott Co., Buffalo, with a party of friends on their way to a summer camp; Robert Bebb, of Muskogee, Okla., looking around; two daughters of J. R. Hellenthal, Columbus, O.; Lewis Henderson, of Omaha, Neb., attending the Knights Templar conclave, and W. R. Adams, superintendent of parks, Omaha, also attending the conclave.

SPRINGFIELD, O.

Various Notes.

The annual picnic of the Springfield Florists' Club has in former years been a "stag" affair, with refreshments and program of sports to correspond, but the number able to attend on any given date has never been such as to make anything like a crowd. Hence it was thought advisable to change the plan this season and make it conform to the custom which seems to prevail throughout the country, as shown by the frequent illustrations appearing in the trade papers, and it was decided to invite the ladies and thus enhance the quality and at the same time add to the number of participants. Accordingly, on Thursday, August 11, the florists, with their wives, daughters and sweethearts to the number of thirty odd, boarded an electric car for Indian lake, minus the customary picnic basket, as it was thought better to take dinner at one of the numerous summer hotels rather than be hampered with luggage and the usual muss of serving a cold lunch. Upon arrival, motor boats were secured and a splendid three-hour trip was enjoyed, Clark's island and other points of interest about the lake being visited. After this ride, the party separated into groups for bathing, rowing, fishing, etc., according to individual inclinations. A thoroughly enjoyable day was spent and a similar plan will doubtless be followed in succeeding years, with a gradually increased attendance of both members and ladies.

The committee appointed to prepare a premium list and take charge of the proposed November flower show has concluded to abandon the project for this year. The reason assigned is that the local retailers do not appear to get together with a sufficient degree of interest and unanimity to make such a show a success. This will prove a disappointment to the Y. W. C. A., whose directors had agreed to furnish a suitable room and work up a big attendance.

Charles Schmidt, of the Schmidt & Botley Co., recently completed a bungalow on the company's nursery lands south of town, and, with his family, has been spending a brief summer vacation at this point, which has the advantage of a small running stream.

Owing to the constantly increasing demand for its roses, which has compelled the growing of an additional 100,000 plants each year since the start in 1904, the Leedle Floral Co. has found it necessary again to add to its capacity and is now completing the erection of three new houses, which cover a space 67x180 feet. These are of Dietsch construction and connect with the present range of houses 21x162 feet. The outer slopes on the north, west and south sides are carried down to a low cement wall by the use of 16-foot roof bars. A portion of the benches are of the usual wood construction, the remainder being ground benches with an 18-inch cement wall, the latter being adapted for the wintering of two-year-old roses in 4-inch pots. PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The tone of the cut flower market improves with the improvement in the principal flower, the aster. The number of really fine asters is increasing and the flood of poor asters is disappearing. Ostrich Plume, Vick's Branching, Vick's Upright and Semple's are all good, the first two especially so. The price on the best has advanced. They are well worth the added figure, selling more readily than the ordinary grade. There is a difference in the demand for the different colors as compared with two weeks ago, for the rose-pink was at a premium and now it is not in demand. Pink and pale pink are preferred. White and good purple sell best in proportion to the receipts, which are much greater, of course, in white than in purple. Ostrich Plume shows a new shade—a most delicate lavender, which appears white in poor light.

Roses come next in importance to asters. Kaiserin, Maryland, Bride and Killarney are all in fair supply, the preponderance strongly in favor of the lower grades. Beauties are good and sell fairly, but of course their number is small. Gladioli are on the back track now. Easter lilies continue excellent; the supply suffices, but is smaller. Valley conditions fluctuate frequently; at times there is not enough. Cattleyas are so scarce that small orders are halved most reluctantly after every effort has been made to get enough. Sweet peas are shorter in supply. Cosmos is improving. Hydrangeas are fine.

Philadelphians in Rochester.

Philadelphia was well represented in Rochester this week. The main body left the Reading terminal in a special car attached to the 10 a. m. train (not 10:30, as incorrectly given out), Monday, August 15. Some went earlier and a few later.

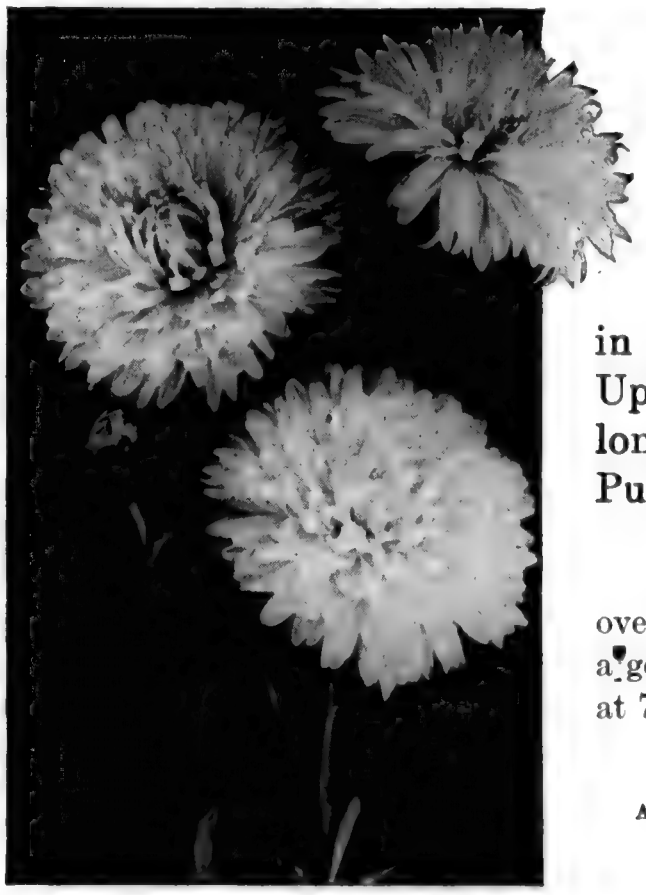
Second and Bristol Streets.

The property and greenhouses at Second and Bristol streets, now owned and operated by W. & H. F. Evans, whose main place is at Rowlandville, have been purchased by Edward and Howard Aschmann, who will take possession as soon as some flower crops have been harvested. They will devote the place to the growing of plants and cut flowers. The place has had a checkered existence, passing through several hands. The feeling on the street was expressed by one of our leading business men, who thought these young men would make it a success, as they are accustomed to battling with adverse conditions and overcoming them.

A Convention Souvenir.

A pretty souvenir that was given out in Rochester was a china piece consisting of a chanticleer standing by a basket ornamented with forget-me-nots underneath the giver's name and address. Mr. Bayersdorfer timed these souvenirs so well that they were received and dispatched to their destination in the convention hall almost at the minute needed.

Various Notes.



Godfrey Aschmann sailed for Europe, August 13, to look over the Belgian azaleas and other stock. John Aschmann is in charge during his father's absence.

J. N. King, of Norristown, considers Bridesmaid the best pink rose today. He uses this variety in quantity. Mr. King's retail business was established by his father in Norristown about the middle of the last century.

William Rehder, of Wilmington, N. C., spent a short time in this city on his way through New England. He will travel by motor.

Peter Flanagan, for many years assistant foreman at Horticultural hall, in Fairmount Park, is visiting his son in Rochester, N. Y.

Lancaster county is sending some fine asters to this market.

BAR HARBOR, ME.

Annual Flower Show.

The third annual exhibition of the Bar Harbor Horticultural Society, which was formed two years ago and now numbers over 250 members, was held in the Building of Arts August 13 and 14. No more beautiful site for a flower show could possibly be designed, the mountain scenery here being enchanting. The annuals shown here, such as lupines, larkspurs, Shirley poppies, antirrhinums, sweet peas and Phlox Drummondi, were of a quality probably unequaled by any other show in the east. The cooler nights and more frequent fogs and rains, added to the proximity of the sea and good soil, bring out extra high colors. Sweet peas, especially, have flowers of a remarkable size.

Some of the leading exhibitors in the various classes were: Mrs. J. S. Kennedy, W. T. Burton gardener; Joseph Pulitzer, A. W. Eckstrom gardener; Joseph T. Bowen, A. E. Chilman gardener; Louis B. McCagg, T. Harrison Stiles gardener; John I. Kane, Kenneth McLean gardener; Ernest G. Fabbri, F. E. Hepworth gardener; D. C. Blair, Eugene Mitchell gardener; George S. For the best pair of palms, Joseph Pulitzer took first prize, also for specimen hydrangea.

William T. Burton had the best six tuberous begonias, also excelling in gloxinias.

A. E. Chilman secured both first and second prizes for achimenes, also for specimen ferns, with excellent plants of Adiantum gracillimum and A. cuneatum. The same exhibitor had a fine group of other specimen ferns, as had John Renwick. Some of his adiantums were five feet across. Mr. Renwick also had some excellent specimen fuchsias.

A. W. Eckstrom had some huge, well flowered allamandas. He took first for three stove and greenhouse plants, with Gardenia florida, Allamanda Williamsi and Brugmansia suaveolens of large size.

A. E. Chilman captured first and second for Begonia Rex.

For the best arranged group of plants William T. Burton was this time in the lead. He used white gesneras, Francoa ramosa and gloxinias, effectively arranged with his foliage plants. Kenneth McLean was second.

Charles L. Shand had the best pair of hydrangeas in tubs, showing finely flowered specimens.

Baskets of cut flowers are always well arranged here. For ladies only, Mrs. Louis B. McCagg won with a charming basket of white and pale blue lupines; Mrs. J. T. Bowen, second, used white and yellow antirrhinums and gypsophilas.

In the open class A. W. Eckstrom took first, with a charming arrangement of pink Shirley poppies and gypsophilas.

William T. Burton secured a silver cup offered for the best novelty in the show, with a beautiful new creamy white gesnera.

Bernard Morris took a cup offered for the best display in the outdoor flower classes, with his dahlia collection, which was well put up. T. Harrison Stiles captured a similar cup for the best vegetable display.

Grapes were splendidly shown by William T. Burton, Eugene Mitchell and John Stalford, bunches five to eight pounds in weight winning in the Muscat and Hambro classes.

Such flowers as lilies, montbretias, gladioli, hybrid tea roses and carnations were all of splendid quality.

Mount Desert nurseries had a fine display of their new nephrolepis, Milleri, and of montbretias, the latter including such varieties as Martagon, George Davidson, Prometheus, California, Vesuve, Sunbeam and King Edmund.

Siebrecht & Son showed a vase of Chrysanthemum Golden Glow.

Perfect weather prevailed during the show, which attracted a big attendance from the many wealthy cottagers resident here. The show here differs from many others, as no money prizes are awarded. It is hoped that some financial incentive may be added another year to still further stimulate competition.

Robert Cameron, of Cambridge, had charge of the general arrangement of the show. The judges were: Fruits and vegetables, Harry Turner, Port Washington, L. I., and E. Jenkins, Lenox, Mass.; plants, Richard Gardner, Newport, and Howard Nicholls, Yonkers, N. Y.; cut flowers, William Anderson, South Lancaster, Mass., and W. N. Craig, North Easton, Mass.

On the evening of August 13, a dinner was tendered by the Mount Desert Nurseries to the judges, exhibiting gardeners and others at the Kebro Valley Club house. William Miller, of the Mount Desert Nurseries, acted as toastmaster and addresses were made by Robert Cameron, Richard Gardner, Harry Turner, Edwin Jenkins, Howard Nicholls, W. N. Craig, William Anderson, T. Harrison Stiles, C. L. Shand, W. T. Burton, Edward Kirk, Eugene Mitchell and a number of others.

NEW SPENCER SWEET PEA ETHEL ROOSEVELT
Natural size, from a photograph

Ethel Roosevelt

in undoubtedly the most meritorious of all the striped, flaked or mottled Spencer varieties now in cultivation. The vines are thrifty, and the blooms come invariably in threes, and four to a stem in a well-grown piece are not hard to find. The individual flowers are of the largest size and most exquisite form. In color the flowers are of a combination difficult to describe. The ground color is an indescribable shade of cream white; the flakings and mottlings of rich delicate pink are such as to try the patience of the most experienced artist, if an attempt be made to copy in either oil or water colors. In this New Spencer Sweet Pea we have really the ideal for form, and know that all who are interested in Sweet Peas must realize that beauty is not to be found only in the solid or self colors. There is among Sweet Pea enthusiasts a rather natural prejudice against striped, flaked or mottled varieties, but the color combination of Ethel Roosevelt is bound to attract attention wherever grown.

Three Other Superb Spencer Sweet Peas

Senator Spencer

Although this variety belongs in the darker colored class, the lighter background gives a mass of the blooms a sort of heliotrope effect which is most attractive. The color is a varying combination of deep claret and chocolate, striped and flaked on a ground of light heliotrope. It presents a beautiful combination of tints and shows up wonderfully well under close inspection, as the dainty detailed markings are most attractive.

Is of the true Spencer form—wavy edges on both standard and wings,—large, round, fluffy standard, long drooping wings. Both standard and wings are marked with the same colors and in the same way, with a trifle more of the wine shading in the wings. The stems are long, and there are four good, large, finely formed flowers on each stem. Senator is the best dark striped variety.

Marie Corelli The large flowers are brilliant rose-carmine or red and uniformly of true Spencer form. The wings are a pure rich rose-crimson, while the standard shows a tint of cherry-red. The whole effect is that of a brilliant crimson,—clear, distinct and most beautiful. The standard is large, round and wavy; the wings are full and inclined to remain boldly outright instead of drooping.

The long strong stems usually bear four flowers each. The plant is of strong growth and very free flowering. Marie Corelli is a variety that belongs in all first dozen sets and will become one of our standard shades in Spencers.

W. T. Hutchins This is a fine, bold, true Spencer of most perfect form and coloring. The buds show a decided buff color. The fully expanded flower has the appearance of light apricot (distinctly lemon at the throat) overlaid with a beautiful blush pink. As the season advances the blush pink shading becomes rather more pronounced. The vigorous vines flower most freely, the stems are long and carry well three or four fine flowers. Both standard and wings are wavy, ruffled and crinkled of the most advanced Spencer type. The flowers are of the largest size, the standard measures two inches across by one and five eighths inches deep.

All the above three have proven satisfactory wherever grown.

For prices on the FOUR SUPERB SPENCERS described above, write for special circular (ready in September), which will give also other illustrations, electrotypes of which will be supplied the trade at nominal prices.

WE ARE HEADQUARTERS IN AMERICA FOR SWEET PEAS, and have to offer seed true to name and type of all the best Spencer and Grandiflora varieties, and shall be pleased to quote prices.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Convention week opens with a hot wave, as usual. Last week was cool and showers have been frequent, so that the long strain and anxiety of the growers and the gardeners is lessened and the damage will be smaller than expected. Wherever we go, the mercury rises for the S. A. F. convention.

"The worst week of the summer," was the declaration of wholesalers and retailers for the week just passed away—absolute lassitude, with few shipments and as few purchasers. It was one of the weak weeks which it is well to cover with the pall of forgetfulness.

Apart from asters and gladioli, nothing worth mentioning is arriving, unless we except also tritomas and orchids, and the latter we now have always with us. The coming season promises to be the greatest orchid demonstration the country has ever seen. The number of large growers of this flower has increased rapidly during the last two years. Among the establishments at Rutherford, Summit, Secaucus, Bound Brook, Mamaroneck, Madison and New Rochelle, there is one place which now sends to the New York market more flowers than were sent by all the growers less than five years ago. Fortunately, the shipping demand grows yearly and public taste has been educated to their appreciation.

Roses have not advanced in value during the last week. A few of the new crop are seen, but they are small and short-stemmed. Nothing but Beauties have sold above 3 cents and a general average would, some claim, go far below $1 per hundred. The carnations arriving remind one of the varieties of twenty years ago; none bring $10 per thousand; 50 cents per hundred is the usual offering. Lilies are down to 3 cents and under. Many were sold at $25 per thousand. Valley is improving in quality. Few asters are of high grade. The great bulk of the shipments are mediocre and hard to dispose of.

The Arrival at Rochester.

At 10 a. m. Monday, August 15, the New Yorkers' special convention train on the Lehigh Valley began its delightful journey. The rainstorm of Sunday night made the temperature agreeable and laid the dust so effectually that not a moment of discomfort was experienced during the entire trip, which ended at 9 p. m., with a cordial welcome by the Rochester committees and the New Yorkers who had already arrived by auto and the exhibitors who had come by earlier trains. The number of 112 was counted on the special; a dozen came by auto and the host of exhibitors and their assistants from the big city and its suburbs made up the 200 which New York promised as its share of the appreciation due the Rochester boys for their wonderful provision of entertainment.

Treasurer W. C. Rickards, ably assisted by F. H. Traendly, H. A. Bunyard, R. G. Wilson, Robert Young, Robert Berry and Joseph Manda, dispensed sandwiches, fruit and liquid refreshments in great abundance and the dinner at the Summit house on the top of the mountains was a treat long to be remembered. After an hour and a half of banqueting and viewing the scenery, President Miller suggested that the thanks of the club and its guests be tendered the transportation committee, F. H. Traendly, John Young and H. A. Bunyard, for the treat so generously provided, which was carried with much enthusiasm.

There was much hilarity on tap, and harmless exuberancy, but the young folks were steadied by the presence of a host of ladies and the guiding hand of the old brigade, which included the veterans, James Dean, F. R. Bolles, W. B. Du Rie, J. G. Esler, J. B. Phillips, Louis Schmutz and W. F. Sheridan.

The conventions heretofore have failed to gather from New York so handsome a crowd of the gentle sex. Mrs. J. V. Phillips did some great missionary work on the way and added a dozen names to the Ladies' S. A. F.

Various Notes.

About 200 of the best retailers, wholesalers, growers and seedsmen will be away from New York this week, and 500 could profitably devote this week to the convention.

John A. Evans, of Richmond, Ind., sailed into New York Saturday, August 13, after a tour of Europe since June 1. He accompanied the New York members to the convention.

John Lewis Childs, of Floral Park, issued an invitation to the trade to visit the gladiolus fields of the firm at his new place, Flowerfield, L. I., some fifty miles east of New York. I. S. Hendrickson, president of the Gladiolus Society, did the honors and a goodly number enjoyed the magnificent view of acres upon acres of the many new varieties, an epitome of which all are enjoying at the firm's Rochester exhibit.

Jonathan Nash and family left Saturday for a month's sojourn at Stanford, N. Y., in the Catskills.

Jacob & Allison, the importers, announce a larger demand than usual this season for their specialties, particularly their grades of cape flowers, which are of finest quality and an especial bargain.

A. J. Guttman's exhibit at Rochester is out of the ordinary and he anticipates victory for his paints and oils as enthusiastically as he boomed the famous red carnation that made him and Charles Weber famous. Messrs. Weber and Wilson are claiming a similar triumph for their new carnation, Brooklyn, soon to be offered to the trade.

Alex. McConnell is still undecided as to the location on Fifth avenue of his new store after May 1, and M. A. Bowe has three offers of desirable centers on Broadway, close to his old quarters in the heart of the city, to one of which he will move October 1.

Joseph Levy and family are still in the Catskills.

The auto trips to the convention were started Saturday evening. Provided the tires behaved, the travelers counted on being dressed and dusted in time for President Pierson's reception Tuesday evening. Robert Schultz was the life of the machine that also carried Mr. Scott, Joseph Fenrich and A. M. Henshaw. William Siebrecht and his Long Island Florists' Club, with his son Henry as chauffeur, went speeding toward Rochester. Outside of the auto travelers, Frank H. Traendly said Saturday, August 13, that the acceptances would surely total over 200 for the special train.

William Ford writes from his country home at Chadds Ford, Pa., that he will be ready for business at 45 West Twenty-eighth street early in September.

The seedsmen all seem optimistic. Travelers report good sales and increased demand. The outlook is most encouraging.

Harry Bunyard is at the convention, following his brief and well earned rest in the mountains with his family.

Ralph M. Ward & Co. seem thoroughly satisfied with the outlook, and the business of this house during the last year has reached enormous proportions. Mr. Ward is completing the improvements this month on his handsome residence at Bound Brook, N. J.

The Yuess Gardens Co., of Newburgh, is making rapid progress. Large additions to its glass area are under way this fall and its wholesale bulb and retail cut flower business has doubled in 1910. Walter Mott is now an officer of the company and makes occasional trips among his friends and customers, to whom he is adding rapidly. The store, offices and warerooms of the firm now take up the entire 4-story building and are all up-to-date. Mr. Mott will attend the convention.

Benjamin Hammond, directly across the river from Newburgh, at Fishkill-on-the-Hudson, is a busy man at present, completing his immense new factory and offices at the Hammond corner, only a block away from the old location he has occupied for over a quarter of a century. Business was never better with him.

The importations purchased by Mr. Hanfling, of Russin & Hanfling, are already arriving. Some great novelties in baskets are among them.

The Geller Florist Supply Co. will be located in its new store on West Twenty-eighth street this week. The improvements and new offices are about completed. Mr. Geller will use the old store on West Twenty-sixth street for storage until September 15.

A. L. Young has adopted the holiday system of some others of the wholesalers and is enjoying his vacation piecemeal at the many ocean resorts within a few miles of the city—a most sensible and recreative method of combining business and pleasure.

Anton Schultheis and family have summered at Far Rockaway and in their auto boat on the Sound.

Charles Millang contemplates his usual enterprise of two headquarters, devoting his store in the Coogan building entirely to violets and his branch on Twenty-eighth street to everything else in the cut flower repertoire.

J. K. Allen has been touring Jersey with his family in his new auto and visiting his many growers, in anticipation of the biggest season in the veteran's career, which covers almost as long a record as that of the S. A. F.

John F. Sharkey has been spending a few weeks in the mountains with his family. Steamer work has been satisfactory with him all summer.

The Market.

Business conditions are reported satisfactory from all sources, considering the season. Only a little choice stock is obtainable, which is readily disposed of, with an occasional funeral to use up any slight accumulations.

Carnations are scarce and of poor quality. Asters are improving daily and some choice strains are noticeable; the Lavender Gem finds many admirers among the flower-buying public. Roses are in ample supply, but the value has depreciated, owing to the abundance of outside stock. Rubrums and auratums are about the only long-stemmed flowers obtainable for decorative purposes. Chrysanthemums are coming along nicely and the indications are that there will be a larger stock this season than usual.

Extensive irrigating is necessary to keep the outside stock alive, as there has been no rain for three months. Fires are ravaging the forests on all sides and a heavy pall of smoke hangs over the city at all times.

Various Notes.

E. Boyce, of Martin & Forbes, is spending his vacation, as usual, in San Francisco.

W. J. Williams and his family are camping for a couple of weeks at the seacoast.

A call on E. E. Billings, on East Eighth street, north, found him busy in his houses of tomatoes and cucumbers, of which he makes a specialty, with good returns.

A recent call on the trade in Seattle, Victoria, and Vancouver, B. C., found business quiet and summer conditions in evidence.

A. W. Post, of Tonseth & Co., is away on vacation, as well as on his honeymoon, as he became a benedict August 4.

E. R. C.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The Market.

Since August trade in general has shown a gradual improvement. There are no particular spurts noticeable, but there is a certain change for the better. Flowers of all kinds are moving nicely and, although the prices are not as good as we should like to see, they are a shade higher than at the corresponding time last year. Carnations are between crops and there is no surplus of anything in that line. The first quality stock sells wholesale at 3 cents, and from that down to about half represents the value. There are no fancy roses to be had at this time; the best we have do not come under that heading, but, with the continuance of the cool weather, we are bound to get some good stock soon.

Asters are the rage at present and the prices are away down, but the chances are that they will be much higher in a few days. Chrysanthemums are seen in small quantities and will be in full bloom in a few weeks. Sweet peas show the lateness of the season and the coolness of the nights, and the stems are much shorter than can be used to advantage in the making of bunches. Gladioli and dahlias move fairly well and other sorts of garden flowers are the same as usual. Maidenhair ferns are plentiful at present, which is a good point and happens only once in a long time.

Various Notes.

O. Holm, a well known gardener connected with the conservatories at Golden Gate park, was held up by thugs within a short distance of his home on the night of August 7. He was severely beaten and robbed of a small amount of money. His assailants have not yet been apprehended.

The Market.

Trade has been heavy in funeral work for the last few days, with stock much better than it has been for some time. Roses are much better, both in quality and quantity. Maids and Brides are about all that are coming in at present. Asters are much better, but quantities of them are so short-stemmed as to be only good for funeral work.

Carnations are scarce in this market, as none of the growers are cutting either old or new stock, but there are prospects of the new stock coming in in a few days. The stock is looking fine and the outlook is bright for some good early blooms.

Trade in general here is at a standstill on account of the street car strike, which is still on, with no prospects of a settlement.

Various Notes.

The Franklin County Fair was held last week, but was not much of a success, on account of the strike. People are afraid to come to the city. The time for the state fair is drawing near, and it will be an awful blow to that in case the strike is not over by that time.

Metallic Thermometer "A"

SIZE—8 inches high, 4 inches wide, 2 inches deep.
Case made of cast aluminum, highly finished.

This little instrument is an accurate, fully tested thermometer showing the correct temperature at all times, and combines a device which will ring a bell at your bedside when the greenhouse gets either too hot or too cold.

The florist needs protection against the overheating of his greenhouse as well as a protection against cold. This device serves both purposes, and at the same time indicates, as previously stated, the actual temperature in his greenhouse.

We guarantee that actual results will at all times be obtained. This device has been subjected to the severest tests in our laboratory for over two years, and at the same time has given entire satisfaction, under all conditions, to many users in the trade.

All you have to do is to set the pointers at the highest and lowest temperatures you want, and the thermometer will do the rest. It will ring a good, loud bell when either point is reached.

This device saves all worry over trouble from sudden temperature changes.

Let us send you our catalogue of styles and prices.
A postal will bring it.

The Market.

Business for the last three weeks has been all that could be expected. Funeral work has been the chief factor and stock for that purpose has been in steady demand. The supply of cut flowers is limited to a few varieties. Asters, hardy hydrangeas and roses about fill the list.

Carnations are hard to find, as most of the growers have replanted and the rest are getting them in as rapidly as possible. The young stock in general is looking fine, a little better than last season, and gives promise of some big crops this winter. Good roses are not plentiful. Young stock is coming on nicely. A good many of the hold-overs are being laid down.

Asters are the one best bet and some good stock is to be had in quantities. Hardy hydrangeas look fine when it comes to funeral work. Gladioli are in fair supply, but in a few days will be a thing of the past.

Vacations are in line. A good many of the local florists are enjoying themselves here, there and everywhere.

K. R.

Pontiac, Mich.—This year's crop of asters at A. B. Lewis' place is believed to be the best he ever grew. He ships a large part of them to Detroit.

The Market.

None of the wholesalers report the market as extraordinarily good. Some say it is fair, others slow, depending entirely upon the varieties of stock offered. All stock of good quality sold readily last week and was sufficient to meet all demands, while that of medium and poor quality sold slowly.

Asters continue to be in large supply. Almost every train into town brings one or more boxes. The first-class blooms sell and the supply equals the demand, but there is an overabundance of medium and short stock. What was said of the asters is also true of gladioli; the fine stock sells at fair prices, while the short-stemmed and small flowers move slowly in job lots at ridiculous figures.

Roses clean up from day to day, but the prices have shaded slightly, owing to the large quantities of other flowers. Beauties, Maryland, Taft, Kaiserin, Jardine and Rhea Reid are of good quality, while White Killarney is somewhat off color. Few Maids are seen.

There is enough of all other stock for all requirements. Easter lilies and speciosums are good property. Some valley and nymphæas are offered. The green goods market is quiet. New green galax is here.

Various Notes.

B. P. Critchell, who has charge of the floricultural decorations for the Ohio Valley Exposition, which is to be held in this city August 27 to September 24, inclusive, has transformed an ugly, unsightly canal into a pretentious bower of beauty. He has used over 60,000 plants, 500 hanging baskets and many loads of sod. The baskets are made up mostly of Boston ferns, vincas and Sprengeri. In the beds along the stream, from Fourteenth street south to the bend and east to Elm street, various sorts of bedding plants were used. The general plan followed was to place cannas immediately along the bank, then a border of geraniums and coleus and finally designs in carpet bedding in grass plots. English ivy and moonvines are used to cover the walls. Pyramidal arbor-vitæ fill the corners. Tall bay trees line the promenade on the lower side of the canal from Plum to Elm streets. The Swiss chalet is decorated with autumn leaves and hanging baskets. Mr. Critchell has also built some pretty ferneries at the piers at either end of the Twelfth street bridge and at other points of vantage. Wild, hardy ferns droop over artificial springs, which are so cleverly arranged that they seem natural. A sight-seer would scarcely think that four or five inches below all these flower beds are the boulders of city thoroughfares that flank the sides of the canal.

There is keen rivalry this week between J. T. Conger and George & Allan for leading honors in the floricultural exhibition at the Carthage Fair. Substantial cash prizes are offered for the best displays of geraniums, roses, gladioli, asters, palms, ferns, lilies, baskets, designs and cut flowers and the best general display.

P. O. Coblentz, of New Madison, O., who continues to ship his fine glads to C. E. Critchell, writes that he is having a hard time with these blooms at present, owing to the continued hot, dry spell.

Weiland & Olinger are offering some fine My Maryland.

Monday, August 15, P. J. Olinger and Fred Bruggemann went to New Castle to see the greenhouses and attend to other business. Last week Mr. Olinger spent several days with his folks in Aurora, Ill.

Sunday, August 14, C. C. Murphy, his daughter, grandsons and Miss Cora Pherson formed a party that motored to Dayton, O., to visit points of interest at that place.

PEAS are the worst item on the short crop list.

THE supply of seed of the winter flowering sweet peas gives indications of falling short of the demand.

IT is reported from authoritative sources in Bermuda that the shipments of Harrisii bulbs have this season been the smallest in years.

THE crop of Roman hyacinths has turned out short this year, and the same may be said of the French crop of Lilium candidum.

T. H. HILL, for thirty years with D. Landreth Seed Co., Bristol, Pa., has taken charge of a department for the Gurney Seed Co., Yankton, S. D.

THE latest word from England is of good sweet pea yields, but the more important crops of vegetable seeds have had a bad year to date.

PANSY seed has sold well and is still going out steadily. Florists did good business last spring with pansy plants and will start larger quantities for next season.

WALTER P. STOKES, Philadelphia, and S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn., have returned from a two months' trip to Europe, on which they combined business and pleasure.

THE catalogue makers are getting busy. While it is too early to fix prices in many lines, the evident intention is to have the books ready in time. "The early bird catches the worm."

THE canners are planning to use their own get-away crops of peas for next year's seed. The get-away crops were more numerous than usual this season because successional lots all came in together and the packers could not handle them.

NOW that Freesia Purity is one of the scarce items, on account of crop failure in California, a good many growers are finding out how badly they need this variety and, incidentally, seedsmen who took orders they cannot now fill are having their own troubles.

SALZER'S SEED SHOP.

At La Crosse, Wis., it is the proud assertion of the natives that the John A. Salzer Seed Co. prints a larger number of copies of its general catalogue than does any other seed house in America. It is said the 1910 edition exceeded a million copies and required sixteen carloads of paper. The postage bill runs to $60,000 a year, the Salzer concern being the largest user of the mails at that office. The minimum number of employees is said to be sixty, with 350 on the pay roll during the busy season.

botanically, and the general climatic and soil conditions requisite for the best development of the two are very similar, says W. W. Tracy, in his monograph on seed growing just published by the Department of Agriculture. Peas require for their most profitable development a cool, moist climate, and they cannot be profitably grown in a hot, dry one, or where there is a liability of such conditions occurring for even a few consecutive days. Clear, bright weather, free from drenching rains, is essential to the ripening and curing of the seed. It not infrequently happens that because of wet and catchy weather at harvest time the seedsman fails to get any usable seed from fields of peas which had given promise of a large yield.

The sections where seed peas can be profitably grown are still further limited by liability to injury from the pea weevil. Injury from this insect is less common north of latitude 42 to 43 degrees than farther south, and crops grown on clay soils, particularly if they be near large bodies of water, suffer less than those grown on sandy soils. For these reasons the growing of seed peas in America is generally confined to the sections bordering on the Great Lakes and to a few locations in Washington, Oregon and northern California, where the climatic conditions are favorable.

There is no garden vegetable in which uniformity in habit of growth and in maturing of the fruit in all the plants of a culture (a single planting of the same sort) is of greater importance than with green peas. The character of the plant and the cultural methods commonly employed in growing it are such that the gathering of the first one or two pickings of green pods is likely to so check the growth of the plants that the later maturing pods are decidedly injured, often so much so as to make the picking of them for culinary uses unprofitable. Again, the good appearance of the pods in the basket is very dependent upon evenness of form and maturity, a comparatively slight difference in the form or the age of a few pods ruining the effect of the whole. Lastly, any overripe or off-colored pea is made more conspicuous and objectionable by cooking.

For these reasons, evenness in size of plant and in date of maturing is a more important element of value in garden peas than in most other vegetables.

Cultural Requirements.

The pea plant, like that of the bean, is very materially influenced as to habit of growth and maturity by soil conditions, and in the pea changes due to this cause are transmitted through the seed seemingly with cumulative force. It is consequently very important that all of the plants of a culture for seed should be as nearly uniform in size and maturity as possible. Often a field which has been recently cleaned of forest or one which has been heavily manured will yield a large crop of seed, which, however, will not be of the best quality because of lack of uniformity in the size and in the earliness of the producing plants.

The best crops of seed peas, as regards both quality and quantity, can usually be grown by turning under old timothy sod on a uniform, well-drained, clay or clay-loam soil. Uniformity in character of the soil on which the crop is to be grown is not of greater importance than that its preparation should be such as to put it into good tilth and to make it as even and uniform in composition and physical condition as possible, and the seed should be so planted as to secure evenness in germination and in the growth of the young plants.

No plant responds more readily to good preparation and culture of the soil than the pea, but its habit of growth and the cultural methods used are such that thorough preparation should be given before the seed is put in the ground.

Not only the growth of the plant but the harvesting of the crop in good condition is very dependent upon favorable weather, and in most sections of this country where seed peas are largely grown there is much more likelihood of the early-planted crops escaping unfavorable conditions than those which are planted later. It is therefore very desirable that the seed should be sown as early as the ground can be put into good condition, and it will generally be desirable that the field, particularly if it be in sod, be plowed in late fall or early winter, which would have the further advantage of destroying many cutworms and other injurious insects. The ground should be worked and the seed sown as early in the spring as possible, but one should not permit the desirability of early planting to tempt him to sow before the ground has had the best possible preparation.

The wonderful new cyclamen

EILEEN LOW.

The most extraordinary break which has been obtained in cyclamens since hybridists commenced to work on the original variety from Persia. We are proud to be the raisers of this striking novelty, which will supply a charming addition to the cyclamen family! The color is a lovely shade of Rose du Barri, a tone of color which so appeals to those of artistic taste, but the great attraction lies in the distinct blush white margin and blush white crest on each petal, which gives an attractiveness found in no other Cyclamen, both lovely and unique. "A Masterpiece of the Hybridists' Art" is not too eulogistic a term for this latest production, which is quite fixed in character, we having been at work on the variety for many years. The plants are good growers and free flowering.

Seed of this charming and unique variety now ready. In packets of ten seeds 25 cents per packet; packets of twenty seeds 40 cents per packet.

LOW'S SALMON KING CYCLAMEN.

Ranks as the most popular of all the varieties, nothing is finer than this! The beautiful clear salmon-pink color of the flower is even more delightful by artificial light, when it glows as does the well-known Begonia Gloire de Lorraine. The habit of the plant is compact and very free, and Low's Salmon King is undoubtedly the most beautiful of all Cyclamen.

Seed in packets at 25 cents and 40 cents. (The larger size containing two of the smaller packets.)

CYCLAMEN GIGANTEUM.

A fine flower and free blooming plant, as is well known, is produced from our strain, which is unsurpassed by any other, both as regards size and color of flower and habit of plant. Plants may be seen in flower from October to March.

Giant White.
Persicum, white, with red eye.
Rose Pink.
Deepest Red.
Bright Red.
Majestic, an extra size flower of the White
Grandiflorum type, bearing blush white flowers on strong stiff stem.
Scented, in packets only, 25 cents and 40 cents.
Mixed colors of the above, including all the shades grown, at 25 cents and 40 cents per packet.

A collection of the finest varieties can be supplied at $1.75 and $3.40, or in packets at 25c and 40c each.

BUSH HILL PIONEER CYCLAMEN.

The beautiful crested and feathered varieties.

These varieties in addition to being interesting have longer lasting qualities than the giganteum type.

SALMON PIONEER CYCLAMEN.

Combines this pretty type with a soft salmon-pink shade. Price, 40 cents per packet.

In separate colors or the following varieties mixed, 25 cents and 40 cents per packet: White, Persicum, Rose, Persicum Mauve.

CYCLAMEN PAPILIO.

(Butterfly Cyclamen.)

White, Red, Rose, Mauve, Persicum.

Seed of these beautiful additions to the Cyclamen, in several colors.

In packets, 25 cents and 40 cents each.

CYCLAMEN VICTORIA.

A pretty form with colored fringe at the top of the petals, giving a curiously interesting appearance to the flower. In several colors.

25 cents and 40 cents per packet.

CYCLAMEN GIGANTEUM, in 6 or more shades for market growers, $7.20 per ounce.

LOW'S SALMON KING, $9.60 per ounce; $4.80 per 1000 seeds; $1.44 per 250 seeds.

BUSH HILL PIONEER AND PAPILIO, $14.40 per ounce; $6.00 per 1000 seeds; $1.80 per 250 seeds.

SCHIZANTHUS WISETONENSIS, ⅛ ounce for $1.20 (small seed).

SCHIZANTHUS WISETONENSIS.

(The original strain as sent out by us.)

A.M., R.H.S., F.C.C. Manchester; Silver Medal, Paris; Highest Award, Ghent.

This beautiful plant lasts for three months in flower, forms a mass of blossom; but we would point out that there are several strains of this variety about, and that the true dwarf variety is an exceedingly shy plant to seed. The true variety when grown cool is of bushy and of dwarf habit.

In packets, 16 cents and 25 cents. The packets at 25 cents contain two at 16 cents.

PERPETUAL-FLOWERING CARNATION SEED.

We have a limited quantity of seed over from our own sowing.

The several excellent new varieties mentioned in our catalogue, raised and sent out by ourselves, are sorts obtained from seed of our own saving. In packets, 25 cents and 40 cents each.

GERBERA JAMESONI (AND HYBRIDS).

The "Barberton Daisy."

This striking herbaceous plant produces flowers of Daisy type borne on long stout stems. The colors of the flowers vary between a bright red to the lighter shades of orange-scarlet. In addition to being a very showy herbaceous plant, Gerbera Jamesoni forms a useful subject for the hybridizer.

The Hybrids are of great variety of color, varying from yellow to palest pink.

It thrives best in a sandy loam, which must be well drained and open and should be covered in winter by leaves or litter, as the plant is not hardy in exposed or wet positions.

Seed in packets at 40 cents each.

Young plants at 25 cents each, $1.95 per doz.

Plants of flowering strength, 35 cents each, $2.90 per doz.

The new fruit, the

LOWBERRY.

A result of the Loganberry crossed with the Blackberry.

This most interesting fruit has already proved itself most valuable. A large Loganberry in appearance, of which it is the same size and shape, but unlike the Loganberry, it has no hard core or large pips, and is very delicious, very juicy, possessing the subtle flavor of the Blackberry. A great bearer and quite hardy, this new hybrid fruit will in the near future be greatly in demand for desserts, preserves and bottling purposes. Strong plants, ready now, price 50 cents each. Six for $2.50.

Special features at our nursery, Bush Hill Park:

Fruit trees and roses, 100 acres.
Orchids, twenty-four houses.
Grapevines and figs, two and one-half acres of glass.
Carnations, perpetual-flowering, Anglo-American, Malmaison, etc.

Flowering Plants, and Small Plants for growing on, can be supplied when desired.

Quantity of Seed Per Acre.

The quantity of seed to use to the acre will depend upon the variety and, in some cases, upon the soil and location. There is a great difference of opinion as to the quantity of seed which will give the most profitable returns, and that recommended varies from eighty to 160 pounds for such small-seeded, large-vined sorts as the Admiral, and from 120 to 180 pounds for the larger-seeded, short-vined kinds like the Yorkshire Hero. The writer believes that the best seed can be grown by comparatively thin seeding.

In some sections of the country, from Dakota westward, pea vines show a much greater tendency to branch from the bottom than the same stocks would if planted in the east, so that in Washington and California as good results can often be secured from the use of only twenty to forty pounds of seed as from the larger quantities that eastern growers think it necessary to use.

Great care should be taken to secure even distribution and covering of the seed. This can generally be accomplished best by the use of some form of grain drill, but care should be taken to select one that will not crack the seed. It will often be desirable after sowing to run over the field with a light slanting-tooth harrow, but if this is done it should be so timed as to avoid either uncovering the seed or injuring the germinating plants.

The Value of Roguing.

While experience has demonstrated that it is practically impossible to materially improve a stock of peas by roguing, this method is often resorted to by many growers in order to secure so-called pure stock. Roguing is of less value with peas than with beans, because the greater number of plants to the acre and the irregularity of arrangement and growth make it a practical impossibility to critically examine every plant, or even a large proportion of the plants of a field, and very often a crossed or off plant cannot be distinguished even by careful examination, yet the seed of that plant may the next season develop into plants which are very objectionable. Again, there is always a possibility, it might even be said a probability, that the blossoms of a plant so conspicuously off that the roguer sees and removes it had already contaminated from one to a score or more of the surrounding plants, so that their product would be seriously "off" the next season.

In practice, the most that one can hope to accomplish by roguing seed peas is to prevent the stock from deteriorating still further, the only hope of securing a pure or improved stock being in selecting and breeding from the best rather than in eliminating the poorest.

While roguing should not be depended upon, especially for the growing of stock seed, it should not be neglected. The fields should be carefully gone over at the time when the earliest plants are passing out of bloom. Each man should take a strip of a certain width and, moving with his back to the sun, confine his attention to that strip, removing all of the rogues seen there and resisting the temptation to go foraging to the right or the left; and he should return over the same strip, scanning it as carefully as at first, for very often a rogue which was not noticeable when looking with the sun is very evident when looking in the opposite direction.

Gathering and Curing.

The commercial value of seed of garden peas is largely influenced by the appearance of the seed, and this is very dependent upon the conditions and the care used at the time of harvest. With many sorts it is desirable that the seed should retain a green shade, and that it may do so, as well as to prevent loss from shelling, the vines should be gathered as soon as the bulk of the crop is hard and before any of the ripest pods begin to shell or have been bleached by the sun.

The best plan of harvesting will depend upon the variety grown, the weather conditions, and the kind of labor, and of farm machinery available. Where the low-priced labor of women and boys can be obtained, the very dwarf sorts, like American Wonder, can often be most economically gathered by hand into bunches of two to four cubic feet. The next larger-sized sorts can be gathered with a sharp hoe, a short scythe, or a pea rake into bunches of about the same size. The larger-vined sorts can be rolled into bunches of four to eight cubic feet with a short scythe or cut with a mower carrying pea guards on the cutting bar, so as to raise the vines and prevent cutting the pods, and then be gathered into windrows or bunches.

While in the field, the bunches should be turned every two or three days and after every rain, in order to hasten the curing and to prevent the rotting or the bleaching of the seed. In order to avoid loss of color or injury from rain, it is desirable that the vines be well stacked or put into barns as soon as they are so dry that they will not mold or spoil in the mow. The vines should remain in the mow until they are well cured and can be easily and conveniently thrashed.

The smaller-vined sorts can usually be thrashed most economically by flails. The larger-vined varieties are best thrashed by an ordinary bean thrasher with part of the concave teeth removed, but it should be so managed and run as to prevent splitting the peas. Skilful handling of the thrasher is quite as important with peas as with beans.

Yield to the Acre.

very dependent not only upon the crop grown but upon the proportion of it one can secure in salable condition. It often happens that through a little delay in harvesting from ten to forty per cent of the seed is lost through shelling in the field. Again, a few days of rainy weather may cause the loss of even the entire crop through sprouting and rotting in the field. Lastly, there may be a very heavy loss through the splitting of the seed in thrashing. The yield also varies greatly with the variety.

Under favorable conditions one may hope to harvest from ten to thirty bushels to the acre, and the most productive sorts may yield up to sixty bushels under favorable conditions. Seedsmen generally contract on a basis of a return of from five to eight times the quantity of seed planted, this basis allowing for the total failure of some of the plantings.

The prices paid for growing seed peas vary greatly with the variety and run from 70 to 95 cents a bushel for some of the easiest grown sorts after a few years of full crops to $1.75 to $2.50 for the dwarfer vined and less productive sorts after a few seasons of light yields.

The comon unit for measurement for peas is the same as for beans, i. e., a bushel of sufficient weight to leave sixty pounds after the necessary cleaning and hand picking. There is a greater difference in the weight of the same bulk of different varieties of peas than of beans. Some of the wrinkled sorts weigh only fifty pounds to the bushel, while the smaller, smooth sorts weigh from fifty-eight to sixty-four pounds. Clean, bright seed is desirable, but it is not so essential as with beans. Any conspicuous injury from the pea weevil or other insects or any discoloration or splitting of the skins in the field or of the grains in thrashing is regarded as justifying the rejection of the crop as not suitable for seedsmen's use.

Seedsmen seldom are obliged to reject because of poor germination, otherwise acceptable lots of peas grown on contract. A properly-cleaned sample will rarely show less than eighty-five or ninety per cent of viability shortly after harvest, though where the plants have been seriously injured by lice or in some other way the seed sometimes loses in viability quite rapidly.

With peas variations due to soil and cultural conditions are transmitted through the seeds, so that care should be taken to grow stock to be used for seed on soils which are uniformly favorable for the best development of the particular variety. Peas are also more liable than beans to crossing through the action of wind or of insects, and for this reason it is not wise to grow stocks of different sorts side by side. They should be either isolated or located in a field of the purest available stock of the variety.

CORN FOR MISSOURI.

A five years' series of tests of field corn, conducted by the Missouri Agricultural Experiment Station, indicates that "for the entire state, Boone County White easily leads as the highest yielding and most popular variety, especially on lands above the average in fertility. It can therefore be generally recommended for practically all of the good corn lands of Missouri."

planted in a separate field and from that time on were never allowed to mix with other corn. Mr. Riley selected a smaller, earlier maturing ear than was prevalent in the White Mastodon and as a result of persistent work he secured earlier maturity, deepened the grain and increased the proportion of corn to cob. The new variety was named after the originator's home county, Boone County White.

About three years after Mr. Riley put this variety out among the farmers, O. C. Block, of Champaign county, Illinois, began breeding it. He is perhaps the best known breeder of this corn after its originator. By this work Mr. Block deepened the kernel materially, increased the roughness and also the circumference in proportion to the length.

The Missouri standard for this variety calls for ears ten and one-half to eleven inches long and seven and one-half to eight inches in circumference. They are cylindrical, or nearly so, in shape, having straight rows which number from sixteen to twenty on the average. The spacing between the rows is of medium width. The butts are fairly large at the shank and only moderately rounded. The tips are blunt, with a tendency toward good kernels extending well out to the end. The cob is rather large. The kernels are medium to wide, rather thick and of medium depth. They have slightly curved sides, a square shoulder at the tip and are pearly white in color. The germ is generally large and bright, extending well up into the kernel. The indentation varies according to the breeder from a smooth elongated dimple to a short beak.

The Boone County White is a medium late-maturing variety, requiring from 120 to 125 days for complete ripening. The stalks are strong and thick and grow to an average height of about eight and one-half feet for the state. The stalks are medium leafy and make good silage and fodder. The corn matures well in the field, with an exceptionally high per cent of marketable corn.

CEMENT WALLS AND BENCHES.

I am about to rebuild a greenhouse and wish to use concrete for the side and end walls. Can you tell me the quantities of cement, sand and stone to use? Please state the thickness of the wall and whether it should be reinforced. Also state how to make cement slabs for tables, to be used instead of 2-inch plank. F. R.

The usual thickness for solid walls is from six to nine inches. There is no necessity for reinforcement, either on walls or corners, at this thickness. The proportions are: Stone, seven parts; Atlas cement, one; or, stone, six parts; cement, one. To make a nice finish, the walls should get a coating of finer material, such as the following: Cement, one part; fine, clean sand, four parts.

Cement slabs for benches should be made in molds, and at the thickness mentioned they should be reinforced with strong wire netting or strands of wire. Make the molds just the size the slabs are wanted and knock out when the cement is sufficiently set to bear handling. Proportions: Sand, six parts; cement one. Ribes.

ERIE, PA.

The Market.

The demand for good cut flowers is keeping up during the summer months. Parties at the summer cottages along the lake have been in vogue, and visitors from out of town are entertained there.

Various Notes.

Dan Offerle, of Warren, Pa., is spending a few days visiting relatives in this city.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Glenn are entertaining their daughter, Mrs. Fred Haxton, of Chicago.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Offerle and Mrs. S. J. Offerle and son, Robert, of Warren, have returned home after a visit with Mrs. Fred Baushard.

Miss Thekla Baur and Mr. W. O. Baur are visiting their sister, Mrs. Lewis Perkins, at Welland, Ont.

Miss Hazel Shade, saleslady at Baur's flower store, is spending her vacation at Lake Chautauqua, N. Y. B. P.

Utica, N. Y.—As reported in The Review a few months ago, Peter Crowe and Henry G. Martin have entered into partnership and Mr. Martin is handling the retail part of the business here. The new company has now been incorporated, under the name of the Crowe-Martin Co., with a capital of $5,000. The incorporators are Peter Crowe, H. G. Martin and Flora Martin.

DETROIT.

The Market.

It would not be fair to say that business is booming. Still, when it is considered that we are in the midst of the month when the florists' business in the cities is usually at a standstill, it is fair to say that business is good. Many visitors en route to the convention were in the city and of course we always like to be busy and make a good showing when strangers are in town.

The supply of stock is also good, making it still more of a pleasure to do work. Roses are of good quality and, while they are not plentiful, the supply is equal to the demand. Asters are improving in quality and becoming more plentiful. Lancifolium lilies are being used by the thousands in funeral work. Greens of all kinds are plentiful.

Various Notes.

"All aboard for Buffalo!" The Detroit representation for the convention city left Monday at 5 p. m., on the steamer Western States, for Buffalo, from which the balance of the journey was made by train. Those attending from Detroit are: Mr. and Mrs. Gus Taepke, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Fetters, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Scribner, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Maynard, Hon. and Mrs. Philip Breitmeyer, Harry Balsley, Louis Charvat, Louis Rush, R. Rahaley, M. Bloy and Wm. Hielscher.

Among the visitors in Detroit, en route for Rochester, were: R. H. Ellis, Leamington, Ont.; George Bayer, Toledo, O.; Christ Winterich and family, Defiance, O.; H. D. Seele, Elkhart, Ind.; W. Matthews and family, of Dayton Floral Co., Dayton, O.

Before returning home, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Fetters intend visiting some of the large eastern cities, including Boston, New York and Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Matthews, of Dayton, are also planning an extended eastern trip.

If the trees in this city are still infested with the tussock moth and tent caterpillar next season it will not be the fault of our local park board. No effort is being spared to rid the city of these tree exterminators. Gangs of men may be seen anywhere, burning the cocoons with torches.

Ferdinand Beyer, for several years gardener at the asylum at Eloise, Mich., gave up his position last July. At present he is in the employ of the park board.

President-elect George E. Browne is mapping out his plans for the ensuing season, which gives promise of being a banner year for the Detroit Florists' Club. H. S.

The daily newspapers, under the date of August 14, contained the following report from Detroit: "Charily holding out a bomb which he said he had found beneath a window of Mayor Breitmeyer's office in the city hall, James Melville, employed by the department of public works as a street cleaner, entered police headquarters today and started a temporary panic. The bomb was such as is used for blasting rock. No clew was furnished as to the identity of the person who left it under the window, and it is not known that any threats have been made on the mayor's life."

New Haven, Conn.—John Seipold is erecting two detached houses, one of them 21x128 and the other 15x128. The material is supplied by the King Construction Co.

Mineral Ridge, O.—Robert Harris, whose greenhouses here were formerly leased to Elder & Carhart, has now taken possession of the houses personally and is conducting them in his own name.

Battle Creek, Mich.—The manufacturers of the Taylor steam trap announce a slight change in the name of the company, which will be known as the Taylor Steam Specialty Co., Inc. The management of the company remains the same as before, but it is planned to take up some other line in connection with the trap business.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Officers for 1910-11: Pres., W. P. Stark, Louisiana, Mo.; Vice-pres., E. S. Welch, Shenandoah, Ia.; Sec'y, John Hall, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. Thirty-sixth annual meeting, St. Louis, June 1911.

Lew Smoots is conducting a prosperous nursery business near Springfield, Mo., where his brother, John Smoots, also has a farm.

The majority of the customs reappraisements of imports of nursery stock this season have been simply advances by the addition of packing charges. The government insists that duty be paid on the packing.

At the Oak Hill Nurseries, in Franklin, Mass., owned by M. T. Twomey, a building and its contents, including a horse, carriages, hay, nursery stock, etc., were completely destroyed by fire August 7. The loss was estimated at $5,000, with only partial insurance. Manager Timothy Buckley, George Boucher and three others were sleeping in chambers on the upper floor, but all escaped by jumping from windows.

EVILS OF THE REPLACE POLICY.

[A paper read by J. R. Mayhew, of Waxahachie, Tex., before the American Association of Nurserymen at the Denver convention, continued from the Review of August 11.]

After reviewing the reason for taking up the question of policy in replacing stock at less than full price, and its effect on the customer, also on the salesman, Mr. Mayhew continued:

The Effect on Deferred Payments.

We may preach settlement in cash all we deem advisable, but, nevertheless, a certain per cent of each year's business will continue to be settled by note, sometimes well secured, but more frequently by plain note of hand and always of questionable value. Especially is this true of all southern territory, where the farmer depends largely on one crop that is available as a source of money in the fall or winter.

Is it true that the policy of replace influences the worth of your bills receivable? Unquestionably it does. In the first place, orders settled by note one year after date represent the hard collections. You do not take a note because you want the paper; neither does the customer give the note because he wants your goods. It is a matter of compromise on the part of both. Your collector is pressed for time, can scarcely resell these goods to advantage, and the customer agrees to settle by note rather than run the gantlet in the courts. Neither party is satisfied with the settlement.

In the course of events this note comes due. You send it to the bank for collection, and the customer is advised of this procedure. In a large majority of instances the note is returned to you endorsed "No attention to notice." Now the tug of war begins. After you have written your debtor repeatedly and every manner of settlement is proposed, you suggest court procedure, etc. It does not move Mr. Customer, for he is hiding behind a promise to replace free of cost or at one-half price the goods for which you hold his note. I wonder how many of you ever received a letter like this: "Them trees you fellers sent me air all ded. Yore agent promised to replace 'em and I've got 3 livin' witnesses. You sen' me my note fur I don't want no more of yore trees. It has been to dry fur trees to live out here any way," etc.

Maybe, if he is above the average man, he will come at you with a proposition to settle on the one-half basis, figuring that you can as well afford to settle on this basis as to replace his goods at one-half the purchase price. Or he may promise to pay the note when you replace free every dead tree, always after the stock has been shipped by prepaid freight or express. When a liberal proposition like this comes, we accept it without hesitancy, complimenting ourselves on having made a good trade, and we have. If this objectionable feature of contracts were eliminated and the customer were made to feel the goods represented by his note were worth 100 cents on the dollar, I verily believe our bills receivable account would enhance in value twenty-five per cent.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

There has been little change in the market conditions since last week. We are hungry for really good asters, for strictly first-class stock is scarce. Quantities of medium and small asters are crowding the market and can be had at one's own figure. The growers say, however, that in just a few days the first of the late-crop asters will be ready.

Gladioli are suffering from the dry weather and those arriving are small; just a few fancy ones are seen. Good America are scarce. Roses are good and finding a fair demand. Beauties are moving out satisfactorily.

Various Notes.

The following left for the convention Monday morning, August 15, via the New York Central, traveling in a private parlor car: Fred Burki, Albert Burki, P. S. Randolph, Paul Randolph, Stewart Randolph, E. C. Reineman, William Loew, Aug. Frishkorn, John Jones, E. C. Ludwig, Mrs. E. C. Ludwig, De Forest Ludwig, J. W. Ludwig and Mrs. J. W. Ludwig.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. will change the location of its store October 1, moving to a new building at 121 Seventh street. This location is central, handy to all downtown retailers and only a short distance from the Allegheny retail florists.

Allen Langhans is on a canoe trip on the St. Lawrence river.

Edward Ludwig has returned from Silver Lake, O.

W. A. Clarke sends greetings from Mackinac Island, Mich.

Frank Faulk is automobiling in Pennsylvania.

H. E. Klunder, of Randolph & McClements, leaves for the east and New England states. Miss Kelley, of the same company, will spend two weeks at Atlantic City.

James Higgins, of Mrs. E. A. Williams' staff, will take up farm life for two weeks.

Current Comment.

The annual picnic of the Omaha Florists' Club will be held on Thursday afternoon, August 25, at Courtland Beach. There will be a good program of games and other sports, and prizes will be awarded. Arrangements have been made for boating and fishing and a general good time. Good bowling alleys will be at the disposal of the florists. The committee of arrangements consists of President George Swoboda, Lewis Henderson, P. B. Floth and George Soransen, whose names are a guarantee of good management.

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Henderson went to Chicago on Monday, August 8, to attend the conclave of the Knights Templar, and spent the whole week in that city, returning home on Sunday evening. While in Chicago, Mr. Henderson gave an order to the Foley Mfg. Co. for material for a new violet house, 26x100, and a propagating house, 12x 100. Mr. Henderson remodeled his heating system last year, and installed a new boiler which has plenty of extra capacity to take care of the added glass.

Mr. Hess, of Hess & Swoboda, has been away, in company with his family, for a few weeks' vacation, spending part of the time with relatives in Michigan.

Among recent visitors in this city were A. Lange and family, of Chicago, who came here July 18 and spent about three weeks at Mrs. Lange's former home, returning to Chicago on Monday, August 8.

A Cheerful Thought

Cheer up, there is still time enough to build that house of yours, and get your crop in "in jig time." Place your order with us right now and start at once doing your grading and digging of holes for the concrete post footings.

While you are doing this, our big factory, with its modern methods and up-to-date equipment, will be turning out your materials, and when you are ready for them they will be ready for you. With the materials we will send along a swarm of men and that house will go up like magic.

The heating can be started before the frame work, and as soon as it is ready the benches can be gotten under way. While we are erecting the frame work, glazing or painting, your men can be filling and planting the benches. Your tile or concrete sides to the house can be left till later, when other things are not so urgent. Sounds good, doesn't it? Write or come and see us, and we will prove its absolute practicalness. But get started—that's the important thing.

Greenhouse Heating.

AN EMERGENCY BOILER.

I wish to know if a tubular steam boiler rated at 100 horse-power will be too large to heat economically a plant of 20,000 feet of glass exposure, in cold weather. We have a boiler of about the right capacity for mild weather, but think of adding this larger boiler for reserve capacity and emergency work. Would restricting the grate area help any, or would it be a better plan to carry the normal grate area and depend on a slow, large fire for the required heat? We are located in southern Kansas. W. H. C.

While a 100 horse-power boiler will be considerably larger than is required for the present plant, it will not prove very wasteful of fuel for reserve use, as proposed. It will, however, be well to reduce the area of the grate about one-third.

THE SITUATION ON COAL.

The coal trade is up in the air—conditions during the summer have been abnormal and no one in the trade is qualified to say how long the present situation will maintain.

The mine workers are in convention at Indianapolis, trying to settle their internal differences, which are a necessary prelude to settling the miners' differences with the employers. An adjustment may be reached at any moment, but, on the other hand, it may be postponed indefinitely. When an agreement between workers and employers finally is reached it will take a fortnight to get the idle mines up to full producing capacity.

During the summer the labor troubles in the western fields have turned the demand toward the eastern coals, on which production has been more steady. With the great reduction of production

Always carry 40 to 50 pounds pressure on the boiler and set your regulating valve for 5 or 10 pounds; then, in case of a sudden drop in temperature, you can adjust to get more heat. Look into this when making changes; install a valve and be free from worry next winter.

Gentlemen:-
In reply to your favor of the 8th asking how we liked the two eight inch eclipse Reducing Valves we bought of you two years ago. These two valves have been in constant use since then and have given the very best kind of service. The temperatures have varied so much out doors during the past two winters that it was a great saving having these reducing Valves working so nicely that we could control our temperature inside the houses with very little fluctuation. A modern heating plant could not get along without them.

in the west, the output of operating mines has been easily placed and there has been no pressure to dispose of coal on track on which demurrage would be piling up. Usually in summer it has been a problem what to do with coal on track, but this year supply and demand have been fairly balanced. If this has been the case during the hot weather, when consumption is at its lightest, it requires no far-seeing man to make an accurate prediction of what will happen as soon as cold weather arrives. There is bound to be a coal shortage and a car shortage this autumn.

Forehanded florists are not waiting for fuel dealers to urge purchases; they are placing contracts and are following up the coal man, urging him to make more rapid deliveries. But there are many growers who are not forehanded and who are neglecting the fuel supply. For such there will be many anxious days in midwinter.

If there ever was a year when prudence demands the maintenance of full bunkers, this is the year.

STEAM FOR TWO HOUSES.

Will you please let me know what piping will be required to heat, with steam, two houses, each 25x100 feet, running east and west? One house is for carnations and the other for roses, ferns, etc. These houses will be fifteen feet to the ridge, with glass in both ends and three feet of glass in the south wall. If I use a 2½-inch main, how many 1¼-inch returns will be needed to heat these houses to 50 and 60 degrees, respectively, in this part of Mon-

"The Florist's Trap"

MOREHEAD

The solution for your condensation troubles

A guaranteed investment with guaranteed results

STEAM TRAPS

RETURN——————NON-RETURN——————VACUUM

YOU, Mr. Florist, can save fuel—cut down labor—and grow better flowers by installing a Morehead Return Steam Trap.

In the first place, there is only a few degrees difference between the steam going into your heating system and the water of condensation coming from the returns.

It is very foolish, therefore, to cool this water down to a low temperature to pump back to the boilers when, by the use of the Morehead Steam Trap, the same water of condensation can be returned directly to the boilers at a very much less expense than by any other method and without losing any of the heat contained in the condensation.

In the first place, to make steam from water, fuel is required to bring this water to the boiling point under the required steam pressure.

For every ten degrees added to the water by any other means, there is a saving of 1% on fuel.

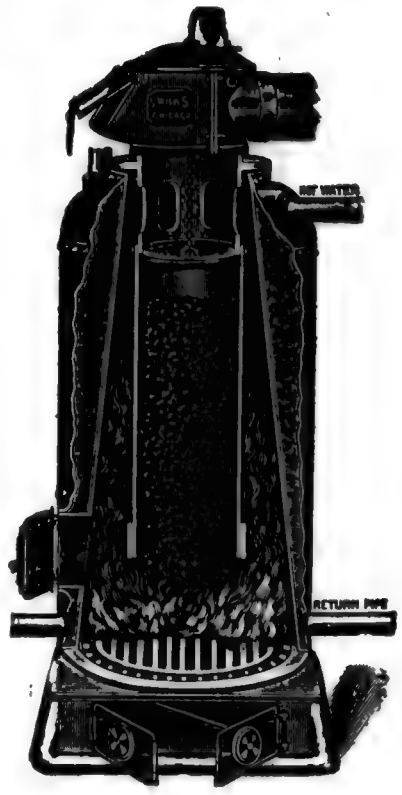
You can readily see that the cooling of the condensation from 250 degrees down to 212 or less, to accommodate your pump, means a considerable loss of heat, fuel and money.

A MOREHEAD Return Steam Trap will put this water back into your boiler at a still higher temperature than 250 degrees, and on 90% less steam required by a pump for returning the same quantity of water.

You then have a combined return trap and boiler feed outfit that will prove out to be one of the best investments you ever made.

The temperature in your houses is always kept absolutely uniform, enabling you to grow better flowers by reason of the improved conditions.

The Morehead Trap when once installed, requires little or no attention, thus enabling you to dispense with extra help necessary to keep your heating system in good order.



If you are having condensation difficulties, or if you want to know about a better and more economical method of draining your particular steam lines, feeding your boilers and save on fuel, water and labor, write us for copy of "Trap Book," and our trial offer proposition.

The "Trap Book" tells how condensation troubles can be ended effectively, and considering results, most economically. It will give you some new ideas regarding steam and its distribution in the greenhouse.

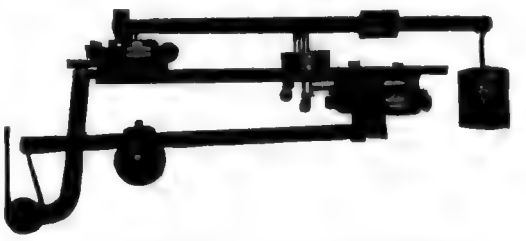
tana, where the temperature may go as low as 40 degrees below zero, though only an rare occasions? What size of boiler will be needed? Will a stack thirty feet high and thirty inches in diameter be sufficient? The houses will be on level ground. How deep should the boiler pit be, to give a good return without the use of a steam trap?

N. K. S.

To heat the houses described, with steam, will require for the rose house one 2½-inch flow and ten 1¼-inch returns, and for the carnation house one flow and eight returns, with one extra return in the south house, which has three feet of glass in the wall. A twenty-five horse-power boiler will be desirable, and for this use a 24-inch chimney, forty feet high.



To secure a free return of the water in the coils, it will be advisable to have the top of the boiler at least two feet below the lower end of the coils.

A PITTSBURG RANGE.

We wish to obtain your advice on the heating of our greenhouses, part of which are old, while others are now being erected. The old part of the range consists mainly of four houses, running east and west. The north one of these four is a carnation house, 42x116. The next house, for bedding plants, is 22x102, with a potting shed at the west end of it. Next is a propagating house, 19x116. The south house, 32x116, is for roses. At the northeast corner of these old houses is the office. Extending south from the office, along the east end of the greenhouses, is a frontal house, 18x92, for ferns and palms.

At the west end of these houses is an alley, extending north and south and separating the old part of the range from the new. The three new houses, each 27x200, run west from this alley, though two of them—the north two—

Great Grates.

As fast as old grate bars are burned out many growers are putting in the Martin rocking grate. The call for this grate is largely increased by the fact that the growers who have used it for one or more seasons are almost without exception equipping other boilers with it. The grate costs considerably more than the stationary bars, but is figured to make a decided saving in fuel, and that is what all the growers are after.

are separated from the alley by a barn. The north two are for carnations and mums and the south house is for lettuce. The boiler room is at the west end of the lettuce house, and is thus a distance of 354 feet from the frontal house. The boiler will be five feet lower than the floor of the frontal house.

The boiler room and the lettuce house, in the new part of the range, are in a direct line with the bedding plant house, in the old part of the range, and we want to run a supply steam line from the boiler straight east to the frontal house. Would this give us good return circulation to the boiler without the use of force? S. F. & N. C.

Judging from the description given, there should be no difficulty in heating the houses. While the details are not sufficiently definite to permit any positive assertion regarding the running of the mains, the following should give good results:

For the new 200-foot carnation houses take off a 3-inch main from the boiler, and from it run a 2½-inch supply pipe through each house from the west to the east end. For the coils use eight 1¼-inch pipes in each house and connect all with the boiler by means of a 1½-inch return.

To supply the other houses—the new lettuce house and the old part of the range—run a 4-inch main through the lettuce house. At the east end of that house take off a 2-inch supply pipe and from it feed six 1¼-inch returns, to heat the lettuce house. Then continue the main pipe on through to the east end of the bedding plant house as a 3-inch. For the carnation house, 42x116, use a 2-inch supply pipe and connect at the east end with fourteen 1¼-inch pipes. Arrange this same piping also for the rose house, 32x116. In the bedding plant house, 22x102, use ten 1¼-inch pipes, with the same number in the propagating house.

THIS HALF

shows you the three times back and forth Burnham Fire Travel that actually is three times. By three times, we mean three times in each half of the boiler—actually a six times travel, you see.

It's this wonderful travel that sifts out practically all the heat from the gases, making hot coils and a cool chimney.

And This Half

shows that deep fire pot with its thick bed of coals and the deep waterways directly over the hottest part. It is the space between these waterways that makes the cross fire channels running from side to side of the fire chamber. It is these channels that lead to the side flue openings. It is these flue openings that prevent the burning gases from rushing to an outlet at rear of boiler, making only the back sections really efficient. Every Burnham Section is equally efficient. Get the word equally fixed in your mind. The Largest Hot Water Boiler ever built

IF YOU SHOULD VISIT [illegible] the well-known "Kroeschell Boiler," you would be [illegible] large number of boilers finished on orders and ready for shipment. Recently there were sixty odd of these boilers finished awaiting shipment, with as many more under construction.

One of their latest models, the No. 16, was being shipped. This is claimed to be the largest hot water boiler ever built, having a capacity of 80,000 square feet of glass for carnations at zero.

The economy of a large single unit as compared with several smaller ones [illegible] has proven to be very great, not alone in fuel consumption and the original cost of the boiler, but also in the way of labor in attending to the firing. Many concerns are installing one large Kroeschell Boiler to do the work of two or more smaller boilers, and the large sizes have become very popular, the Eastern demand being extremely heavy. Recently a number of these large sizes were shipped into the Northwestern territory, Vancouver, B. C. and neighborhood. They have a very large trade in these boilers in the cold northwest territory, where they are also used in heating Office Buildings, Hotels, Stores, etc.

The demand for smaller boilers than the No. 1 Kroeschell Boiler for small ranges, as well as for residences, has induced them to add to their list four smaller sizes, "A," "B," "C" and "D," ranging in capacity from 2,250 square feet of glass to 4,500 square feet of glass. They now build twenty-two sizes of their Hot Water Boiler, ranging in capacity from 2,250 to 80,000 square feet of glass, enabling them to furnish boilers for ranges of any conceivable size.

It is very interesting to note the great care that is taken by this firm in the selection of the material, the construction of the boilers, and the excellent workmanship put on all their work.

The demand for Kroeschell Boilers has been very heavy, and during the past four years, the Kroeschell Hot Water Greenhouse Boiler has been installed to heat over 9,000,000 SQUARE FEET OF GLASS. This does not include the Kroeschell Steam Boilers, of which they also sold many, to be used in greenhouses.

Their records show sales very much in excess of last year at this time, and at the present rate their business will show an increase of fully fifty per cent over last year's sales.

"WHAT THE USERS SAY"

The No. 9 Boiler we bought of you is heating 15,000 square feet of glass. We have no trouble to keep up temperatures of 60 degrees for rose houses and 52 degrees for carnation section in the coldest weather. Your boiler has given entire satisfaction. We also have a cast iron 9 sectional boiler, but prefer the Kroeschell. This has been the coldest winter we have had in years and we burned less coal than usual. We use your Generator and believe it helps the circulation.
JUNCTION CITY FLORAL CO., Junction City, Kan.

The No. 7 Boiler I bought from you is heating 14,000 square feet of glass; I think it can take care of 16,000 feet. I do not have any trouble to keep up temperature of 50 degrees in the coldest weather. I fire only once after 12 o'clock midnight. The boiler has given perfect satisfaction. I have four cast iron boilers—like the "Kroeschell" the best of all. If any one wishes to inquire about your boiler, let them write me, for I think your boilers are good ones.

sary? The greenhouse is even-span. The sides are three feet six inches high, with eighteen inches of glass. The dwelling rooms average fourteen feet square. I would require a temperature of 60 degrees in the greenhouse and 70 degrees in the dwelling. The temperature in this part of Washington state seldom goes as low as zero. A. H. K.

For heating the greenhouse and dwelling a hot water heater with a rating of about 600 square feet of radiation will be needed. In the greenhouse use two 2-inch flows and eight 2-inch returns.

The question does not give the height of the rooms in the dwelling or the number and size of the windows, but about fifty square feet of radiating surface will probably be required for each room. Use a 2½-inch flow pipe for the house and a return of the same size. For each radiator, 1¼-inch pipe will answer for the flows and returns.

A HOUSE IN NORTHERN OHIO.

A few weeks ago I asked your advice about two 50-foot greenhouses. Since then, however, I have changed my plans. I have moved the house which is to be my boiler house and potting shed, and have built my greenhouse east and west, one house instead of two. It is 21x78 feet and eleven feet to the ridge, with two feet of glass in the sides, which are four feet high. The boiler pit floor is three feet below the level of the greenhouse floor. Will you kindly give me instructions how to pipe this house? The gable of the potting shed is five feet higher than the greenhouse. Is there room for an expansion tank inside? It will be about five feet above the main flow? S. J. B.

There should be plenty of room for the expansion tank in the gable of the potting room, although a little more elevation would be desirable.

For a house 21x78 feet, with two feet of glass in each side, it will be advisable to use three 2½-inch flow pipes and twelve 2-inch returns for 60 degrees, or three flows and eight returns for 50 degrees. Give both flows and returns a slight fall, but keep them as high as possible.

MERIDIAN, MISS.

Application for a charter of incorporation was recently filed by the Cummings Co., of this place. The incorporators are W. W. Cummings, F. B. Cummings, A. H. George, E. L. Carter, J. M. McBeath, H. F. Broach, Jr., and A. S. Bozeman. The amount of capital stock is $30,000; "provided, however, that said company may organize and begin business when $5,000 capital stock shall be subscribed and paid in."

This is the outcome of a small business started a little over seven years ago by Frank Cummings, Sr., then 76 years old, who had considerable experience as a florist. It was afterwards enlarged under the title of the Frank Cummings Bulb and Plant Co. Soon after the death of Frank Cummings, Sr., which occurred a little over two years ago, the business was taken in charge by F. B. Cummings under the supervision of his father, W. W. Cummings. It has grown rapidly under their administration and has now reached the point where, with increased capital, they feel assured that a large business will be the result of their efforts.

They have built up a splendid market for their products among the larger wholesale firms of the north, as well as a retail catalogue business of no mean proportions. At their nurseries, about one-half mile north of this city, there are acres upon acres of flowers in full bloom.

Rochelle, Ill.—Augustus Caspers, who began business here in 1878 as a gardener, nurseryman and florist, has greenhouses and grounds on North Sixth street, which are in excellent condition and constitute one of the attractions for visitors to the town.

Savannah, Ill.—J. Y. Lambert & Son recently decorated the first prize automobile for a parade of these vehicles. They used Sprengeri for green, with roses of various colors, 2,000 in all, with bows and streamers of 6-inch chiffon, and some pampas plumes. Mr. Lambert, Jr., says that if automobile decorators will make more use of the pampas plumes they will find them to be about the showiest article in the florists' stock.

KILLS MILDEW INDOORS AND OUT

Now, in regards to your "Grape Dust," I must say that when I first heard of it I had but little faith in it, because I had tried all the remedies for Mildew I had ever heard of, but they were of little value. It seems that my location favors Mildew especially. When other Florists are but little troubled, my houses are generally well covered with the Mildew, so when I sent for the first keg of "Grape Dust" my Roses were almost worthless, but since using the "Grape Dust" my Roses are the "Picture of Health." There is not a vestige of Mildew to be seen on my place, and my Roses fetch double the price; besides, I have saved a month of firing, which I used to be compelled to do to kill Mildew.

Yours respectfully,
F. J. A. SCHAEFER, Florist,

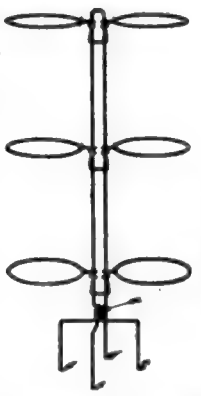
The Market.

Trade remains about the same as usual. There is not much doing outside of funeral work, but that is plentiful. Asters are the flowers that are principally depended on just now; there is a good supply of them and the quality also is satisfactory. Queen of the Market is the sort that is most generally grown in this vicinity. Carnations are about played out, and those that are left are poor and small.

Asters retail at 35 cents per dozen. Roses are still coming in; they retail at $1 to $1.50 per dozen. Gladioli are also good now; they sell at $1 per dozen for the best. There are also plenty of outdoor flowers, such as zinnias, marigolds, phloxes, etc., for use in making up bouquets. Sweet peas are not up to the usual quality, as it has been rather dry for them, but the recent rains will revive them considerably. These sell at 50 cents per hundred blooms.



Various Notes.

Early closing is still the rule. This is a good time to take vacations.

W. S. Brown has the contract for the grading around the newly altered municipal buildings. He still has seven men employed in cutting grass and doing garden work. W. L.

Keene, N. H.—Ellis Bros. & Co. are rebuilding one of their greenhouses, erecting a storehouse, and enlarging and improving their establishment in various other ways.

Aphine is Endorsed by Eminent Entomologists.

Aphine

COLLIER'S WEEKLY—"Aphine has a future as long and wide as the United States."
"Aphine will do all you claim for it and more."—CHARLES H. TOTTY.

The Insecticide That Kills Plant Lice of Every Species.

Endorsement of this wonderful Insecticide is now universal.

It has no equal. It has demonstrated its merits by numberless tests.

We are shipping it daily to every State in the Union. Its field has extended to Canada, South America and Europe. The leading gardeners endorse it everywhere.

The agricultural colleges are loud in its praises. Here are just a few testimonials from hundreds of those who have tested and tried it, and have not found it wanting:

I can honestly recommend Aphine to kill green fly, black fly, white fly, brown scale, white scale, Belgium scale, red spider, thrips and mealy bug, if the directions are followed carefully and the spraying or dipping done thoroughly, and as far as I can tell does not injure the tenderest foliage.

(Signed) Yours truly, JAMES WHITING,
Foreman Department of Floriculture, Massachusetts Agricultural College, Amherst, Mass.

GOLDEN GATE PARK,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., May 13, 1910.

"We have thoroughly tested out Aphine on plants grown in the open and find it most effective for such work, as it eradicates all scale and aphis, for which I can strongly recommend it. Our outside roses in Golden Gate Park were badly infested with aphis. With the first application of Aphine the pest was entirely destroyed."

(Signed) JOHN MCLAREN, Supt.

FERN-CROFT FARM, CONCORD, N. H., May 8, 1910.

"Received the Aphine and gave it a good test. As I wrote you before, my 'mums' were literally covered with lice, but that is a thing of the past. I regard Aphine practically as an insurance against insects and I shall not be without it in the future."

(Signed) H. D. WHITNEY, Prop.

"The Aphine received from you has been thoroughly tested and proved to be a most effective exterminator of all such insects to which ferns are subjected. If your preparations are of uniform strength, a solution of 1 to 15 will be safe on the most delicate ferns." J. F. ANDERSON, Fern Specialist.
Short Hills, N. J.

"After using your product for the past three months, find that it has effectively killed all the green and black fly on double and single violets in our houses without injuring in the least the flowers or even tender center leaves. We sprayed our young sweet pea vines, which were badly infested with green fly, and that one application has cleaned out every aphis visible to date. We have placed order for ten gallons Aphine with your local agents to keep on hand, as we cannot afford to be short should another crop of fly appear."

J. H. SLOCOMBE.
New Haven, Conn.

"I have made a careful test of your insecticide upon several different plants that were infested with green fly, red spider and scale, and in every case it completely destroyed the pests in question, with no apparent harm to the plants treated, although some of them were in a soft growing condition, most susceptible to injury from such preparations."

A. HERRINGTON,
Supt. Florham Farms Park Dept., Florham Park, N. J.

Aphine meets all the requirements of the largest commercial growers to those of the smallest gardener. It suits the greenhouse demands, and also those of the small house plants.

Aphine is an insecticide that can be safely applied to vegetables of all kinds. It has been proven effective against the cabbage worm, the melon louse, and many other insects and blights injurious to truck products.

Aphine is sold in four sizes. Gallons, $2.50; Quarts, $1.00; Pints, 65c; Half Pints, 40c.

HELENA, MONT.

Condition of Crops.

There is a grasshopper plague in Montana, and the nursery and greenhouse men are having difficulty in keeping the pest away from their stock. The severe drought in the state is also playing havoc with all agricultural business. Dry farming has been annihilated. The numerous forest fires are adding to the general distress, and rain would be most welcome on every hand.

A Visit to Butte.

Recently the writer, accompanied by Mr. Hocking, foreman of the fine new range of the State Nursery Co., visited Butte and called on the various florists there. We were cordially received by all.

Bayard T. Manlove's place is in good shape and he is making headway all the time. His cold storage is perhaps the best in the city.

The fine store of the Butte Floral Co. contained some splendid specimens of grower Henrichsen's carnations. At the greenhouse of this firm, where potted plants are largely grown, the staff of men were found on the roof, but the foreman found time to talk to us and tell us all that was worth knowing.

At the store of Hansen & Co. some structural alterations were being made, to meet increasing trade.

At the Columbia Gardens, which are among the finest examples of the landscape man's work in the state, V. Siegel and his staff gave us a good time and we found his tuberous begonias and calceolarias in great shape. The Columbia Gardens are the property of W. A. Clark, and he certainly spares no expense on it. In the great western mining town it seemed part of another world.

Time was when Butte's one tree consisted of a dead stump. Today, due largely to the proximity of the State Nursery, it has quite a number of gardens beautified by Carolina poplars and other trees, and the popular allusion to Butte as an absolute wilderness is now quite as untrue as it is unkind. The State Nursery Co. will be well represented at the first show of the Helena Horticultural Association, which will be held August 26 and 27. In connection with this show there is no lack of enthusiasm, and the prizes and entrants are numerous. W. J. H.

"A PERFECT GREENHOUSE HOSE"

FURNISHED in continuous lengths of 500 feet. An exceptionally high grade hose manufactured with a woven jacket insertion instead of cotton duck, and with specially selected rubber in the inner tube and cover.

The woven jacket construction makes a stronger hose than can be obtained from cotton duck, and absolutely precludes the possibility of cover opening at seam—a common cause of failure of hose made on cotton duck. This construction also gives a more flexible hose and reduces the possibility of kinking.

"Magic" Hose is guaranteed to stand a pressure of 500 pounds per square inch, although its bursting pressure is far in excess of this.

GULF COAST GROWERS.

At present I am head gardener at a large northern institution, but I have been wondering lately what my chances of success would be if I were to go to New Orleans, Mobile or some other city near the Gulf coast and start business as a grower of carnations and other stock for cut flowers. I understand, of course, that the cultural methods must be entirely different there from what they are here, and I am aware that carnation growing in the far south is still in what might be called an experimental stage. Can you tell me just what has already been accomplished in that line, and what is the outlook for the future?

H. D. C.

As to growing carnations and other cut flowers around New Orleans and Mobile, we southerners must admit that we have never given the carnations a fair trial, but we expect they will do just as well as the roses if given the proper houses and careful attention. Before we had made a success of growing roses under glass, everybody said they could not be grown as well as up north, and so it is with carnations and all other plants. We now believe that anything and everything can be grown here, with the proper houses, good water and the right attention. Carnations will require open houses, with plenty of side ventilation and proper attention. Outside they will not do, unless planted on high land, well prepared with cow peas, well drained and kept free from weeds.

Outdoor roses do well and generally bloom ten months out of the twelve. Chrysanthemums, gardenias, asters, cosmos, dahlias, tuberoses, gladioli, lilies, narcissi, hyacinths and other bulbs, flowering shrubs, most annuals and perennials and most other flowers can be grown here in their proper season.

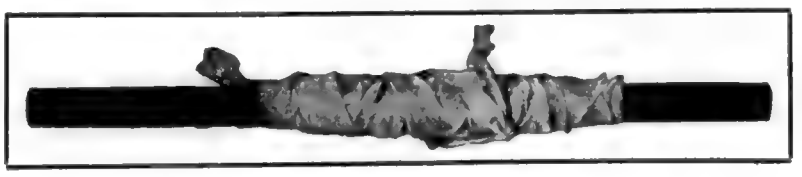
"Electric" vs. Ordinary
Rubber Hose for Florists

THIS is what happens when you try to kink "Electric" Greenhouse Hose. You simply can't do it. The processes of manufacture of this hose are protected by basic patents and are so perfect and thorough that it positively will not crack, split, burst or kink.

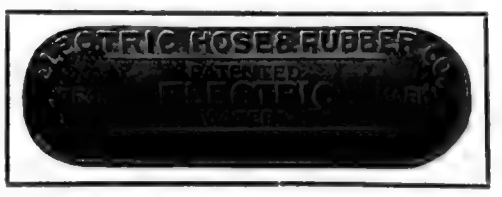


This is the way we do it: A jacket of heavy cotton seine twine is braided—braided, mind you, not wrapped—over a tube of pure rubber. Next, a second tube of rubber—same quality—is put on over the cotton jacket. Another mantle of seine twine is braided around the second tube. A third tube—corrugated lengthwise—is put on over the second cotton jacket. Each of the five alternating sections of rubber and of cotton is a complete hose in itself. The hose is then encased in metal tubes, or moulds, 500 feet long. Liquid under high pressure is put inside the hose and locked in. The whole is then placed in a sealed oven and live steam turned on. This steam heats the liquid, causing it to expand and force the hose against the metal tube. A pressure of 500 pounds to the square inch is applied. The rubber tubes and the braided cotton jackets are amalgamated or vulcanized by the pressure; converted into a single or unified fabric of mingled rubber and cotton.

This shows the construction of "Electric" Greenhouse

Hose and demonstrates the process described above.

Before it leaves our factory, every foot of "Electric" Hose is tested by a water pressure of 400 pounds to the inch. Ordinary pressure used by Florists for syringing is 40 to 60 pounds—and frequently bursts ordinary hose, which requires numerous patches like this:



"Electric," made as described above, will outwear, three to one, a hose of ordinary, "lapwelded" construction.

This is why you should ALWAYS USE "ELECTRIC" HOSE

HARDY CABBAGE PLANTS.

During the last few years many people in this part of northern Texas have been ordering winter cabbage plants from the east and planting them in the field in December. We have seen these plants stand zero weather without damage. We should like to grow a lot of these, but do not know where to procure seed that will produce hardy plants. Can you give us the desired information? Please state, also, when seed should be planted to be ready for the December market. H. & H.

There is no difference in the seed sown to produce these so-called hardy cabbage plants. H. & H. may order from any reliable seedsman any variety that his locality requires, and save the expense of buying the plants. The plants are in reality no hardier than others, grown anywhere else and hardened off. The seed should be sown about September 1 to 15, to have plants ready for December setting. The home-grown plants will be just as good and quite as hardy as eastern plants.

VEGETABLE GROWERS TO MEET.

George E. Rowe, editor of the Fruit Grower, published at Grand Rapids, is chairman of the committee that has charge of the arrangements for the third annual convention of the Greenhouse Vegetable Growers' and Market Gardeners' Association of America, which will be held in Grand Rapids the last week in September. He says:

"We are planning the biggest convention ever held. While there were approximately 300 present at the meeting last year in Ashtabula, we expect to have over 500 present at the meeting in Grand Rapids. A splendid program is being prepared. The ablest men in America will discuss the subjects of greatest interest to market gardeners and greenhouse vegetable growers.

"Besides having an opportunity of visiting one of the most beautiful cities in the United States and the home of the famous Grand Rapids lettuce, Davis bean, Grand Rapids Forcing tomato, etc., visitors will come into contact with and exchange thought with the most progressive growers of the day.

"We wish to know at your earliest convenience if we can count on you being present. If you wish to make an exhibit, let us know the amount of space you will require, so that we may be able at an early date to make the necessary arrangements. An early reply will be greatly appreciated."

Cross Section of a Sunlight Double Glass Sash on a Sunlight Frame

Here is the sash you don't have to cover

Two layers of glass instead of one. A ⅝ inch layer of dry, still air between—a perfect non-conductor—a transparent blanket—takes the place of mats and boards.

The saving in time and labor

Sunlight Double Glass Sash will pay for themselves in a single season. They never need covering—and therefore save half the time you have to give to single glass sash in covering and uncovering—in watching them on frosty nights.

Earlier, Stockier Plants

Under Sunlight Double Glass Sash the plants get all the light all the time. Every grower will see at once the value of the earlier, stockier plants resulting. Your crops will mature weeks ahead of the grower's who uses single glass sash—and you will get the benefit of the high prices in the early market.

Here is what one grower says

Harry S. Walker of Terre Haute, Ind., grew cabbage, tomatoes, eggplants and mangoes under Sunlight Double Glass Sash last season. The minimum thermometer was 15 below zero. No plants were injured. He says in part: "Plants grown under single layer sash were not to be compared with mine".

PECKY CYPRESS FOR BENCHES

We are at your service—try us.

THE FOLEY MANUFACTURING CO.

Call and see us when in Chicago. The largest plant in the world for our line of business.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF OUR ESTABLISHMENT

PRACTICALLY ALL GROWERS NOW REALIZE THAT BY FAR THE BEST MATERIAL FOR GREENHOUSE BENCHES IS

PECKY CYPRESS

It is like any other cypress except that it looks as though it were full of worm holes, but isn't; it is especially like other cypress in that it has to be open air dried in the south. It is dried until it weighs three pounds to the board foot, or 3,000 pounds to the thousand feet. Consequently 10,000 feet will make a minimum car. We can ship from our yards to the central states, or direct from the mills in Louisiana to florists in New England and to growers in the far west, and it is only a question of time when all growers will use it.

It doesn't take so very many feet of bench to call for a minimum car of pecky cypress. It comes 1x6 inches and the boards eight to twenty feet long. With about an inch between for drainage, a bench four feet wide will take seven boards, or three and one-half feet lumber measure for each lineal foot of bench. Side pieces bring it up to four and one-half feet. Consequently a minimum car, 10,000 feet of lumber, would suffice for only twenty-two benches 4x100. The average car contains 13,000 to 15,000 feet.

If you don't need a car yourself, get your neighbors to club in with you and order a car. :: ::

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

A CARBONE WREATH.

You know how it was with Topsy: she "just growed." That's the way a certain style of flower arrangement comes to be the favorite and characteristic style at a flower store: it just grows upon the workers. At the well-known Carbone store in Boston wreaths of the character illustrated on this page are turned out so frequently as to have become characteristic. Of course the variety is infinite, so that monotony or even similarity is avoided; simply a wreath of green is embellished with a bunch of foliage and flowers of harmonious kinds. In the picture there are pandanus and croton leaves with cypripediums, which is a classy combination and not at all on the cheap order, either in appearance or in cost to the retailer, except that the foliage from unsalable plants can be used, thereby getting a salvage on what otherwise might be lost. Croton foliage, bright in color, is useful to the retail florist in a great variety of ways, in baskets of plants, in table centerpieces and in designs; it might well be employed more often than it is.

FASTENING FLOWERS TO PEWS.

Can you give me any information as to the method used in fastening flowers to church pews for weddings? I know that, as in all work of this character, it is not permissible to use anything that would injure the wood in any way, and I should like to know if the wire arrangements advertised in some of our supply books are used. Any information you can give me will be appreciated. A. D. C.

You are right. In floral decorating it is not advisable to injure in any way either woodwork, wall paper, tapestry, moldings or, in fact, any part of the home or church. Of course there are times when it is next to impossible to fasten garlands, arches, etc., without in some way getting a hold by driving nails or screws, and if the holes left after removal of the nails are going to show badly, then I would suggest that the people for whom the work is being done be informed before going ahead.

Church pews are in most instances made of wood, and are often so finely finished that every little scratch will show. The ends, to which the flowers are fastened, are usually of such a shape that it is hard to draw a piece of string tight enough to hold anything, as the string persists in slipping off. But, on the other hand, the pews are usually fashioned after some old style of architecture and have some carving. A finely pointed tack or push pin, driven into some of the crevices of the carving or where the end of the pew is joined to the seat itself, will leave no mark after being removed and will aid in keeping a wire or string in place.

I have never known that any special articles were advertised or placed on the market for fastening decorations to church pews, but if you will go to a hardware store and get some iron clamps, such as are used by carpenters and joiners for holding boards together while being glued, you will find them just suited to your purpose. By using these clamps you can clamp a board to the end of the pew, and to this board can be fastened anything you wish. Be sure you place some soft material between the clamps and the finely finished woodwork, or you will be no better off than before. These clamps can be obtained in various sizes, and should not be too large—just large enough to fit over the end of the pew. After being put in place, the clamp can be hid with either some smilax or other green used in the decoration, or with ribbon. H. S.

MEETING THE LOCAL DEMAND.

We noted in The Review of August 11, page 11, the inquiry of a reader who thinks he will be compelled to give up part of his business, on account of lack of available space, and who is in doubt as to which branch of the trade he ought to abandon—the cut flower and design work or the growing and selling of bedding plants. The inquirer states that he is located in a town of 20,000 inhabitants, has about 12,000 feet of glass, and does a business of $10,000 to $12,000 per year. He says that his local trade would not use all the plants he could grow in his entire range and that some wholesaling would be necessary, while, on the other hand, he would still be obliged to buy some cut flowers, even if he dropped the plant business.

Our opinion would be that he ought, by some means, to increase his glass area so as to be able to supply the demand of his market in all branches. If he fails to do that, someone else will do it and will crowd him out.

Several seasons ago we tried to drop the sale of tomato and cabbage plants, as the handling of these crowded us so much during the week preceding Memorial day, but we found that many people then conceived the idea that we would not sell any sort of plants any more, not even bedding stock.

To do a business of $12,000 a year in a town of 20,000, with 12,000 feet of glass, is better than we ever before heard of, and the inquirer would better stick to his present course.

CONVENTION AFTERMATH

THE CLOSING SESSION.

As delegates to the Second National Conservation Congress, which meets at St. Paul, September 5, the president appointed J. C. Vaughan, Theodore Wirth, H. E. Philpott, O. Holm and H. C. Irish.

The committee on school gardens, as a committee, had done nothing, but its chairman, Benjamin Hammond, and W. B. Du Rie, one of its members, who has been a school teacher forty years, take a great deal of interest in the work, and each presented a report on the present status of the movement.

Robert Kift, Philadelphia, sent a letter calling atention to Mothers' day as of great value to florists, and, on motion of W. R. Smith, resolutions were adopted rendering to Miss Anna Jarvis "this our public recognition" of the debt the craft and the nation owe to her for the idea.

The committee on final resolutions—Walter Sheridan, J. K. L. M. Farquhar and P. Welch—presented resolutions expressive of the society's appreciation of the splendid welcome and thanking those who provided the excellent facilities. Those mentioned in the resolutions were the Rochester Florists' Club, the mayor, the Chamber of Commerce, F. W. Vick, C. H. Vick and the ladies' committee. The report closed with these words: "The society recognizes the present convention as one of the best in its history," and was unanimously adopted.

Various Notes.

The insurgents were in the saddle.

The proposed amendments to the constitution had short shrift.

H. M. Altick, Dayton, O., is the champion gunner. He carried off all three of the individual first prizes in the convention contest at the traps, winning $60 in gold.

The Ladies' S. A. F. is in affluent circumstances. The treasurer's report showed $337.22 in the bank. An appropriation of $50 was made for a special prize to be offered at the National Flower Show.

H. A. Bunyard made the speech presenting to Supt. C. H. Vick the exhibitors' testimonial of appreciation for his efficiency and consideration. The gift was a gold watch—a little beauty—suitably inscribed.

H. B. Beatty sent the following telegram from Atlantic City to John Westcott: "Mrs. Beatty joins me in best wishes to our friends and yourself. May you all have the bestest of best times."

The Ladies' S. A. F. had an informal affair at the Hotel Seneca, Thursday night, at which the songs of Miss Perle B. Fulmer were a feature. The ladies' organization has added immensely to the social side of the conventions.

The Hail Association has lost so much money on single thick glass that it is proposed to raise the rate on it to 10 cents. A year will be required to make the necessary change in its by-laws.

A large proportion of the visitors found time to visit the nursery of Ellwanger & Barry, where everything looks as if it were a well-kept public park. The roses were a center of interest, but there were innumerable specimen trees and shrubs to admire and many things not ordinarily seen in a commercial place.

One of the exhibitors suggests that entry blanks be handed to each one purchasing space, to give all a chance at the society's awards on novelties. Several were so busy staging their exhibits that they overlooked the formality of entering their new things until after the judges had made their rounds, after which it was too late.

When the American Association of Nurserymen visited Denver in June J. A. Valentine entertained a party of them at dinner, so at Rochester they squared accounts by giving a spread in his honor at the Hotel Rochester. C. L. Yates and Jas. McHutchison were the leaders.

Friday morning about 300 of the visitors were taken in special cars for a hurried trip to the trial grounds and seed farm of James Vick's Sons, a few miles outside the city. There was not sufficient time to do more than note the air of perfect order and neatness everywhere about the place. There had been a heavy rain the night before, which had knocked down some of the crops, but which was welcomed by the plants, for it has been an exceptionally dry season at Rochester, as elsewhere. The farm is beautiful rolling land and there is almost everything growing on it but weeds—not one of these could be found unless one counted the abundant supply of "weeds" from Havana.

President Pierson was immensely pleased with his gavel, the presentation of which took him entirely by surprise. It was a beauty, of solid ivory, with a silver band inscribed, "Presented to F. R. Pierson, president of the Society of American Florists, by friends of the New York Florists' Club." Not many have seen Mr. Pierson at a loss for words to express his thoughts, but when E. G. Hill presented the silver service at the closing session, as the recipient later said, "He laid it on so thick he had me completely flabbergasted,'' a condition to which the prolonged cheering of the audience may have contributed.

Among all the faithful members of the local committees who labored both in season and out to contribute to the success of the various contests, none is deserving of more praise than Albert F. Vick, chairman of the bowling committee. By personal solicitation Mr. Vick secured the donation of thirteen of the prizes offered in the bowling contests, as well as substantial concessions from the management of the alleys.

E. H. Vick, who won a diamond pin in the shooting contest, is the proudest man in Rochester. He says he ''hadn't pulled a trigger in twenty years.''

THE OUTING AT MANITOU.

Nearly a thousand visitors, local florists and persons interested in allied lines, boarded the first cars for Manitou Beach at 11 o'clock on Friday morning. Some 300 returned from the Vick seed farm excursion just in time to catch the last of the special cars, and nearly every car during the afternoon brought some who were detained in the city by business. The florists' stores and Crosman's and Vick's seed stores closed during the afternoon, thus permitting all employees to enjoy the outing with the visitors.

Immediately after lunch, J. M. Keller rounded up his ball team, and the afternoon's sports opened with a game between picked men from the S. A. F. and the Rochester association. Here, as on all other occasions, the Rochester boys showed a generous spirit and allowed the visitors to win by a score of 23 to 4. Edward S. Osborne, of Rochester, called the strikes and balls. The members of the winning team were C. J. Graham, Cleveland; Jos. Manda, New York; H. D. Scott, Buffalo; W. H. Carney, Pittsburg; G. C. Shaffer, Washington; D. W. Ludwig, Pittsburg; A. Swan, Philadelphia; C. W. Curtis, Oliver Boucher, Rochester.

The various sports were run off under the direction of J. M. Keller, with George C. Crosman and Richard G. Salter as judges. The winners and prizes follow:

Snail race—W. H. Carney, Pittsburg, umbrella; A. R. Luetchford, Rochester, cigars.

Backward race—W. H. Carney, Pittsburg, umbrella.

Pipe race—George Robinson, Montreal, cigars; Edward Reid, Philadelphia, pipe.

Elephant race — George Prevost, Edward Swartzenburg, Rochester, cigars; George Cramer, John Vollamer, Rochester, cigars.

Time race—Harry Brush, Rochester, Florists' Exchange for one year; Philip Menker, New York.

Fat men's race—C. E. Critchell, Cincinnati, cuff buttons; John J. Perry, Baltimore, umbrella.

Ladies' 50-yard dash—Mrs. Edna Clinch, Buffalo, hand-painted vase; Mrs. A. Zirkman, Philadelphia, hand-painted dish.

Girls' 50-yard dash—Ruth Tickner, Rochester, picture; Catherine Salter, Rochester, nail file.

Boys' 50-yard dash—Walter Lavigne, Rochester, military brushes; Roland Poehlmann, Chicago, watch.

Shoe race—Fred Thomann, Rochester, umbrella; George Smith, Rochester.

Blind men's race—Edward Swartzenburg, Rochester, traveler's watch.

Ball-tossing contest—Mrs. Frank H. Traendly, New York, umbrella; L. H. A. Klein, Towson, Md.

The committee in charge of the outing consisted of Fred W. Vick, J. M. Keller and George B. Hart. The entertainment committee included all the officers and members of the Rochester association, with a special ladies' committee consisting of C. B. Ogsten, E. R. Fry, J. O. Pridmore, W. T. Logan, George T. Boucher and John House. All worked well.

the sale of tomato and cabbage plants, as the handling of these crowded us so much during the week preceding Memorial day, but we found that many people then conceived the idea that we would not sell any sort of plants any more, not even bedding stock.

To do a business of $12,000 a year in a town of 20,000, with 12,000 feet of glass, is better than we ever before heard of, and the inquirer would better stick to his present course.

CONVENTION AFTERMATH

THE CLOSING SESSION.

As delegates to the Second National Conservation Congress, which meets at St. Paul, September 5, the president appointed J. C. Vaughan, Theodore Wirth, H. E. Philpott, O. Holm and H. C. Irish.

The committee on school gardens, as a committee, had done nothing, but its chairman, Benjamin Hammond, and W. B. Du Rie, one of its members, who has been a school teacher forty years, take a great deal of interest in the work, and each presented a report on the present status of the movement.

Robert Kift, Phjladelphia, sent a letter calling atention to Mothers' day as of great value to florists, and, on motion of W. R. Smith, resolutions were adopted rendering to Miss Anna Jarvis "this our public recognition" of the debt the craft and the nation owe to her for the idea.

The committee on final resolutions—Walter Sheridan, J. K. L. M. Farquhar and P. Welch—presented resolutions expressive of the society's appreciation of the splendid welcome and thanking those who provided the excellent facilities. Those mentioned in the resolutions were the Rochester Florists' Club, the mayor, the Chamber of Commerce, F. W. Vick, C. H. Vick and the ladies' committee. The report closed with these words: "The society recognizes the present convention as one of the best in its history," and was unanimously adopted.

Various Notes.

The insurgents were in the saddle.

The proposed amendments to the constitution had short shrift.

H. M. Altick, Dayton, O., is the champion gunner. He carried off all three of the individual first prizes in the convention contest at the traps, winning $60 in gold.

The Ladies' S. A. F. is in affluent circumstances. The treasurer's report showed $337.22 in the bank. An appropriation of $50 was made for a special prize to be offered at the National Flower Show.

H. A. Bunyard made the speech presenting to Supt. C. H. Vick the exhibitors' testimonial of appreciation for his efficiency and consideration. The gift was a gold watch—a little beauty—suitably inscribed.

H. B. Beatty sent the following telegram from Atlantic City to John Westcott: "Mrs. Beatty joins me in best wishes to our friends and yourself. May you all have the bestest of best times."

The Ladies' S. A. F. had an informal affair at the Hotel Seneca, Thursday night, at which the songs of Miss Perle B. Fulmer were a feature. The ladies' organization has added immensely to the social side of the conventions.

The Hail Association has lost so much money on single thick glass that it is proposed to raise the rate on it to 10 cents. A year will be required to make the necessary change in its by-laws.

A large proportion of the visitors found time to visit the nursery of Ellwanger & Barry, where everything looks as if it were a well-kept public park. The roses were a center of interest, but there were innumerable specimen trees and shrubs to admire and many things not ordinarily seen in a commercial place.

One of the exhibitors suggests that entry blanks be handed to each one purchasing space, to give all a chance at the society's awards on novelties. Several were so busy staging their exhibits that they overlooked the formality of entering their new things until after the judges had made their rounds, after which it was too late.

When the American Association of Nurserymen visited Denver in June J. A. Valentine entertained a party of them at dinner, so at Rochester they squared accounts by giving a spread in his honor at the Hotel Rochester. C. L. Yates and Jas. McHutchison were the leaders.

Friday morning about 300 of the visitors were taken in special cars for a hurried trip to the trial grounds and seed farm of James Vick's Sons, a few miles outside the city. There was not sufficient time to do more than note the air of perfect order and neatness everywhere about the place. There had been a heavy rain the night before, which had knocked down some of the crops, but which was welcomed by the plants, for it has been an exceptionally dry season at Rochester, as elsewhere. The farm is beautiful rolling land and there is almost everything growing on it but weeds—not one of these could be found unless one counted the abundant supply of "weeds" from Havana.

President Pierson was immensely pleased with his gavel, the presentation of which took him entirely by surprise. It was a beauty, of solid ivory, with a silver band inscribed, "Presented to F. R. Pierson, president of the Society of American Florists, by friends of the New York Florists' Club." Not many have seen Mr. Pierson at a loss for words to express his thoughts, but when E. G. Hill presented the silver service at the closing session, as the recipient later said, "He laid it on so thick he had me completely flabbergasted," a condition to which the prolonged cheering of the audience may have contributed.

Among all the faithful members of the local committees who labored both in season and out to contribute to the success of the various contests, none is deserving of more praise than Albert F. Vick, chairman of the bowling committee. By personal solicitation Mr. Vick secured the donation of thirteen of the prizes offered in the bowling contests, as well as substantial concessions from the management of the alleys.

E. H. Vick, who won a diamond pin in the shooting contest, is the proudest man in Rochester. He says he "hadn't pulled a trigger in twenty years."

THE OUTING AT MANITOU.

Nearly a thousand visitors, local florists and persons interested in allied lines, boarded the first cars for Manitou Beach at 11 o'clock on Friday morning. Some 300 returned from the Vick seed farm excursion just in time to catch the last of the special cars, and nearly every car during the afternoon brought some who were detained in the city by business. The florists' stores and Crosman's and Vick's seed stores closed during the afternoon, thus permitting all employees to enjoy the outing with the visitors.

Immediately after lunch, J. M. Keller rounded up his ball team, and the afternoon's sports opened with a game between picked men from the S. A. F. and the Rochester association. Here, as on all other occasions, the Rochester boys showed a generous spirit and allowed the visitors to win by a score of 23 to 4. Edward S. Osborne, of Rochester, called the strikes and balls. The members of the winning team were C. J. Graham, Cleveland; Jos. Manda, New York; H. D. Scott, Buffalo; W. H. Carney, Pittsburg; G. C. Shaffer, Washington; D. W. Ludwig, Pittsburg; A. Swan, Philadelphia; C. W. Curtis, Oliver Boucher, Rochester.

The various sports were run off under the direction of J. M. Keller, with George C. Crosman and Richard G. Salter as judges. The winners and prizes follow:

Snail race—W. H. Carney, Pittsburg, umbrella; A. R. Luetchford, Rochester, cigars.

Backward race—W. H. Carney, Pittsburg, umbrella.

Pipe race—George Robinson, Montreal, cigars; Edward Reid, Philadelphia, pipe.

Elephant race—George Prevost, Edward Swartzenburg, Rochester, cigars; George Cramer, John Vollamer, Rochester, cigars.

Time race—Harry Brush, Rochester, Florists' Exchange for one year; Philip Menker, New York.

Fat men's race—C. E. Critchell, Cincinnati, cuff buttons; John J. Perry, Baltimore, umbrella.

Ladies' 50-yard dash—Mrs. Edna Clinch, Buffalo, hand-painted vase; Mrs. A. Zurkman, Philadelphia, hand-painted dish.

Girls' 50-yard dash—Ruth Tickner, Rochester, picture; Catherine Salter, Rochester, nail file.

Boys' 50-yard dash—Walter Lavigne, Rochester, military brushes; Roland Poehlmann, Chicago, watch.

Shoe race—Fred Thomann, Rochester, umbrella; George Smith, Rochester.

Blind men's race—Edward Swartzenburg, Rochester, traveler's watch.

Ball tossing contest—Mrs. Frank H. Traendly, New York, umbrella; L. H. A. Klein, Towson, Md.

The committee in charge of the outing consisted of Fred W. Vick, J. M. Keller and George B. Hart. The entertainment committee included all the officers and members of the Rochester association, with a special ladies' committee consisting of C. B. Ogsten, E. R. Fry, J. O. Pridmore, W. T. Logan, George T. Boucher and John House. All worked well.

EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

[A paper by W. N. Rudd, Morgan Park, Ill., read before the Society of American Florists, in convention at Rochester, August 16 to 19, 1910.]

We would nearly all of us receive with scornful disbelief a statement that the farmers were our superiors in enterprise and in "business horse sense," and yet such is the fact in certain directions.

The farmer early realized the enormous possibilities for good to him in the experiment stations, and he also realized that here was a chance to get back in direct benefits some of the money he was paying out in taxes. He realized this, acted on it, and developed a gold mine. The experiment stations have revolutionized all agricultural and horticultural operations in the last few years, save and except the ornamental branches, whose workers have shown almost no interest, and have largely refused to receive help where offered. It is human to work along the line of least resistance. The farmer received gladly what was offered and clamored for more. When funds were scanty he besieged the legislatures and compelled them to continually increase the appropriations for his work.

What Has Been Done for the Farmers.

You cannot sell the farmer gold bricks any more. If you try to sell him oat hulls flavored with molasses to feed his cows, he will talk understandingly about fats and proteids (which you and I know nothing about); he will ask for a guaranteed analysis, and will know what it means when he gets it. You cannot fool him any more. He has been educated by the experiment stations and, whenever in doubt, consults them—his best friends and counselors. He knows about nitrogen and potash and phosphorus; which of them he needs, and how much he should get for his dollar. By his support, the stations have accomplished the impossible, and compelled the meat trust to be fairly honest in selling its fertilizers. The stations, through the printed matter they are sending free to all who will receive it, through the farmers' institutes which meet in all the sections of the state, and by experimental farms favorably located, are telling the farmer what crops to grow and how to grow them; what fertilizers and feeding stuffs to use and how to use them; how to take care of his pigs, his chickens, and his family; how to build his barns and his fences; how to breed his live stock; in fact, everything relating to his business. He sends his sons to the agricultural college and even goes himself, for the short courses everywhere given now.

Do the Florists Get Their Share?

What do we get out of this proposition? Nothing. We help pay the bills and the farmers get the benefits. Just as long as we do not squeal and get our feet in the trough, they will continue to do so. Not that they are to be blamed or that anything should be taken from them; just have the trough lengthened, more feed put in, and one end partitioned off for us.

We are just as much in need of help as the farmer ever was—very likely more so. Take the coal pile. We buy more gold bricks along with our coal every year than the farmer ever did. What member of this society can truly say that he knows anything accurately about coal? Who of us knows what a "British thermal unit" is? The farmer knows all about proteids and fats in his feeding stuff and we do not know even the name of a unit of measure of heating value. We know only in a vague way that one coal is supposed to be better than another. We do not buy on actual heating value basis, we do not burn our coal economically and we do not know whether we get what we buy or not. Verily the smoke from our chimneys represents a world of wasted dollars.

Buying Coal Intelligently.

Practically every state makes the seller guarantee to the farmer just what he is getting and how much of each, in his fertilizer and feeding stuffs. No state makes the seller guarantee to the florist what he is getting or how much, when he buys coal. No seller is compelled to tell you that his coal is high in sulphur and, though of good heating value, not suited to your conditions for that reason. Why should not the coal man guarantee his coal in the same way the feed man does his feed or the fertilizer man his phosphate? One coal is good under certain conditions and very poor under others. Coal is our heaviest expense, after labor. In every market there are cheap coals which are very dear to us, and high-priced coals which may be the cheapest in the end, but we do not know about it; we only guess. It takes money, and time, and scientific knowledge to work these matters out and put the knowledge obtained in shape to be usable by the busy commercial man.

When the farmer buys a car of phosphate rock, he buys it under a guarantee as to the amount of phosphorus it contains. He pays, as his share, $1.50 for an analysis of that car by a public official. If the percentage of phosphorus varies from the guarantee, the bill is changed so as to cover the exact amount of the phosphorus in that particular car. He buys what he wants, and knows to a certainty that he gets what he buys.

Is there any reason why we could not be put in position to buy a car of coal with a guarantee as to its heating value and an analysis showing the percentage of sulphur and other deleterious substances?

Scientific Study of Fertilizers.

The whole science of fertilizing has been studied and well worked out for the farmer. This does not help us greatly. Our conditions are different. Our culture is intensive. The farmer's needs are reasonably good results, cheap. The difference between nitrate of soda and sulphate of ammonia, between sulphate of potash and muriate, are settled for him. All those subtle distinctions between stem and leaf growth, color, size of flower, substance, and date of maturity of the flowers, are nothing to the farmer, and everything to us. A difference of $10 per ton in fertilizers of the same elements would be vital to the farmer, while a difference of three times that amount would be nothing to us, if balanced by some small difference in effect on leaf or stem or flowers.

We are so ignorant that we say, "Let chemicals alone, even if you have to start a dairy to obtain the natural manure." This is right and proper so long as we remain in our present state of ignorance regarding the use of chemical manures, but it is so, merely because we lack the "know how" and because it is too expensive for the ordinary man to teach himself. There is every reason to believe that equally good results could be obtained by the exclusive use of chemicals, in connection with the proper amount of humus, as by the use of animal manures. It is even quite probable that were this subject worked out to its ultimate end, means would be at hand to attain results which our present wildest dreams would not measure. The Illinois station is working upon this line, but the subject is so extensive that half the stations in the country could investigate it to good advantage for years to come.

Breeding and Testing of Varieties.

The cross breeding of varieties is a most fascinating work. Breeding for the purpose of obtaining new commercial varieties is to be left to the commercial grower, however, but there is a vast field for the experiment station worker in studying the many unknown things about the subject which make failure the rule and success the exception.

Insects and fungous diseases, like the poor, we have always with us, and new forms are constantly appearing. The demand for work here is never-ending.

The testing of the commercial values of varieties has no place in the station work, except so far as making notes of such facts as incidentally become evident in growing and studying plants for more legitimate purposes. This is not to be understood as applying to the importation and testing of new or unknown species, which is valuable and legitimate work. The commercial grower can do his own testing better and quicker than the man who has no commercial knowledge and can not work under commercial conditions.

What to Do About It.

The foregoing are only a few of the many ways in which the stations can help us. Almost without exception the station managements are not only willing, but would be glad to take up this work for us. The funds are rarely available, however. Our part of the work is to get in touch with them, tell them what our needs are, find out what facilities they must have and then go to the legislature and get the money.

In closing, the writer wishes to urge each member to look at the last year's report of this society, page 171, and see what his state is doing for floriculture, which in most cases he will find to be nothing at all. Illinois has a good start, Maryland is doing well, while Pennsylvania, the second (certainly not worse than the third) state in the Union in floriculture, is doing nothing. Indiana, with its old and well organized State Florists' Association, has allowed the floricultural department, which was doing such brilliant work a few years ago, to die of starvation, and so it goes on from bad to worse. It is a shame to us, and might so easily be different.

Truly, the farmer appears to have more enterprise and more business sense than we have, and he certainly has more exact knowledge and better technical training for his work.

CONCRETE CONSTRUCTION.

[An address before the Society of American Florists at Rochester, N. Y., August 17, by Edward D. Boyer.]

The uses of Portland cement concrete have become so general as to have become almost universal and the knowledge of its value has been so thoroughly disseminated that a paper on the subject today is apt to be filled with repetitions and contain little new, or of interest to the listener. I had hoped today to present to you lantern slides of our collection of photographs of greenhouse construction, as I believe I could more successfully entertain you in this manner than any other, but in this I was disappointed, and I, therefore, beg your indulgence while for a few minutes I endeavor to give you the reasons why concrete in greenhouse construction is so eminently superior to any other material.

Concrete has won its position as the building material of the future entirely on its merit. Whether in monolith, in reinforced, in stucco or any of its varied forms, it is entirely fireproof, absolutely vermin and frostproof, never requires repairs and saves fuel, as it retains heat and keeps out cold. To my mind its value as a material for the construction of little and useful things is mostly from the fact that it is plastic and easily worked, lending itself to practically any design.

What Concrete Is.

Concrete is a mixture of cement, sand and gravel or crushed stone in varied proportions, depending only upon the strength desired, and when mixed with water and placed to remain undisturbed, hardens into permanent stone. Good concrete does not alone depend on the cement; it is also necessary to have good sand and gravel, and by good sand and gravel I mean material free from clay, loam or vegetable matter—in other words, should be perfectly clean, and as a safeguard I consider it always well to wash these aggregates. Sand alone with cement makes good concrete providing the sand is a graded one, that is, from fine to coarse, and where the work is not thick, as in bench or table construction, I should consider the cement and sand mixture the best, as with the fine aggregate you are less liable to have voids in the finished work. For this class of work and for floors of greenhouses, where the latter need not be over three inches in thickness, a one to three mixture will prove generally satisfactory. In foundation work or in the molding of hotbed frames a regular concrete can be used, composed of one part of Portland cement, two and one-half parts of sand, and five parts of screened gravel or crushed stone. Cinders from hard coal ash can be also used in the place of gravel or stone, but the cinders should be thoroughly washed and as free as possible from particles of unburned coal. All concrete for form work should be placed wet and spaded or puddled into place.

It is very difficult in a paper of this character to specialize, as every one of you have different problems, particularly of design, confronting you or in contemplation, and I, therefore, feel that I can only cover the subject in a general way and outline the general rules for the use of concrete in construction such as you are engaged in.

In Greenhouse Construction.

In greenhouse construction concrete is particularly adaptable, especially in the interior, where the constant use of water tends to the rapid decay of wood, and in consequence where wood is used, as, for instance, in the tables or benches that contain moist earth, it is short lived and in constant need of repair. Concrete when once placed never needs repair. Water, instead of damaging, improves it, and the unsightliness of rotten sideboards is entirely eliminated and the uniformness of it all lends to the general appearance and proper upkeep.

The usual foundation for a greenhouse building need not be over ten inches broad and only deep enough to be below the frost line, which, of course, varies in different sections of the country, and this concrete, as stated before, to be a one part cement, two and one-half sand and five gravel or stone mixture. We will take as an example the house described in the book issued by the Atlas Portland Cement Co., "Concrete Construction About the Home and on the Farm," which is assumed to be a total width of sixteen feet. The ridgepole should be six inches wide by eight inches deep, of the same proportions of concrete as above, reinforced with two ½-inch steel bars. The beams should be 2½x5 inches, extending from ridgepole to side wall and reinforced with a ½-inch steel bar, which will be sufficiently strong to support the sashes. [Evidently the author of the book was not describing a commercial house.—Ed.] The side walls can be seven inches thick to the height required. Eight-inch square posts reinforced with four ½-inch bars in each corner, placed at 10-foot intervals, will support the ridgepole.

The concrete greenhouses pictured in the book are at Westwood, N. J., and are of this construction, and, as you will note, have no wood to decay or burn in their entire construction. The concrete in this instance is not particularly pleasing from the fact that care was not exercised in spading the wet concrete against the outside of the forms and by not remedying this with a mortar plaster after the forms had been removed.

Greenhouse Benches.

The tables can be made in one member by casting in one continuous piece of concrete, or they can be constructed in parts. There is no particular advantage of one over the other, although the former is probably the cheaper. When cast in one piece two and one-half inches is the proper thickness and various concrete can be used for the purpose, and taking cost into consideration, the mixture would depend on the available aggregates.

As previously stated, my preference for this work would be a one cement, three graded sand mixture, but a one cement, two sand and four cinders, if properly reinforced with wire fabric or ¼-inch rods about six inches apart, would serve the purpose, although more difficult for the unskilled to place and not as dense as the cement and sand mixture. The tables should have holes or slots at the bottom to facilitate the drainage of the water. In the cases where separately molded slabs are used the cracks between the slabs will supply sufficient drainage.

Greenhouse trays for supplying the necessary amount of moisture are most satisfactory if constructed of concrete, as they also will not rot or shrink when they become dry, and need no attention but to keep filled. They can also be easily made an attractive and decorative feature of the greenhouse. These trays can be made like the slabs for the tables, only that they should be brushed on the inner surface with a layer of pure cement mixed to the consistency of cream, immediately after the forms are removed.

Concrete coldframes or hotbed frames are also the most desirable, again because they will not rot like wood, and are absolutely permanent. These walls need not be over four inches thick, with 3-inch division walls for the window rests, and can be composed of the same concrete mixture as for outside walls. All these foundations should be carried below the frost line.

Concrete lends itself to decorative purposes very admirably, and concrete veranda boxes for flowers and vases are frequently seen now, not only on stone or cement houses, but also on frame. They, too, need not be renewed every year or two, but will last forever.

In conclusion, I wish to reiterate that concrete for the particular work in which the majority of you are interested is the ideal material and when you once familiarize yourself with its use you will adopt it in all your construction work.

I also beg to invite any questions your members may choose to ask regarding the use of this material, as I feel that in that way you can better reach your individual problem than through a paper such as the inadequate one herewith presented.

SWEET PEA SOCIETY.

At a meeting of the National Sweet Pea Society at the S. A. F. convention at Rochester, August 18, Vice-president Wm. Sim in the chair, a motion to act in conjunction with the S. A. F. in Boston at the National Flower Show to be held in the spring was unanimously carried. F. R. Pierson promised to secure an appropriation for sweet pea premiums and the society voted that it would endeavor to secure the same amount, so it is quite possible that the national show will have a prize list of about $350 for sweet peas.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.

At the Rochester meeting the following pledged themselves to furnish exhibits for the rose section at the National Flower Show next March: Poehlmann Bros. Co., William H. Elliott, Adolph Farenwald, E. G. Hill Co., Lake View Rose Gardens, Erie Floral Co., Joseph Heacock Co., Bassett & Washburn, John H. Dunlop, Waban Rose Conservatories, F. R. Pierson Co., Welch Bros., Thomas Roland, the Montgomery Co., A. N. Pierson, Inc.

The society prepares the schedule for the rose classes and guarantees all premiums over $1,750, the sum placed at its disposal by the National Flower Show committee. The following sums were placed at the disposal of the executive committee: By August F. Poehlmann, W. H. Elliott, Waban Rose Conservatories, A. N. Pierson, $50 each; by W. F. Kasting, W. J. Palmer, P. Welch, E. G. Hill, Thomas Roland, $25 each.

The executive committee, in addition to President Elliott, Vice-president Farenwald, Secretary Hammond and Treasurer May, now has as members Philip Breitmeyer, Peter Bisset, W. F. Kasting, W. R. Pierson, August F. Poehlmann and J. A. Valentine.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Formosa Lilies.

Those who have not yet tried lilies of the Formosa type should not fail to do so. These come from the island of Formosa and arrive much earlier than the Japanese longiflorums. I have grown them for two seasons and am much pleased with them. These lilies are evidently seedlings, as they show a wide variation in foliage, habit and flowers. Some will flower when eighteen inches high and others may reach five feet before doing so. Occasionally stalks will carry only one or two flowers, but others will produce six, eight, ten or even more. Occasionally the outside of the trumpets is purplish or chocolate colored, reminding one of L. Brownii, but the majority are pure white. The greatest point in favor of this lily is its almost entire immunity from disease. Harrisii are so badly diseased that many have dropped them, and even many of the longiflorums have to be thrown away. So far, these Formosas have proved practically disease-proof.

They arrive early and the first lot is already potted—the smaller bulbs in 5-inch and the larger in 6-inch pots. Last year some were seen in flower early in January. They do not all flower at one time, as do the other lilies. They are rather tall to use as Easter plants, but for the grower who wants cut stalks from day to day they are the most valuable introduction of late years. Any grower who has not yet grown Formosas should try a case this season. Order at once, as the supply will soon be exhausted.

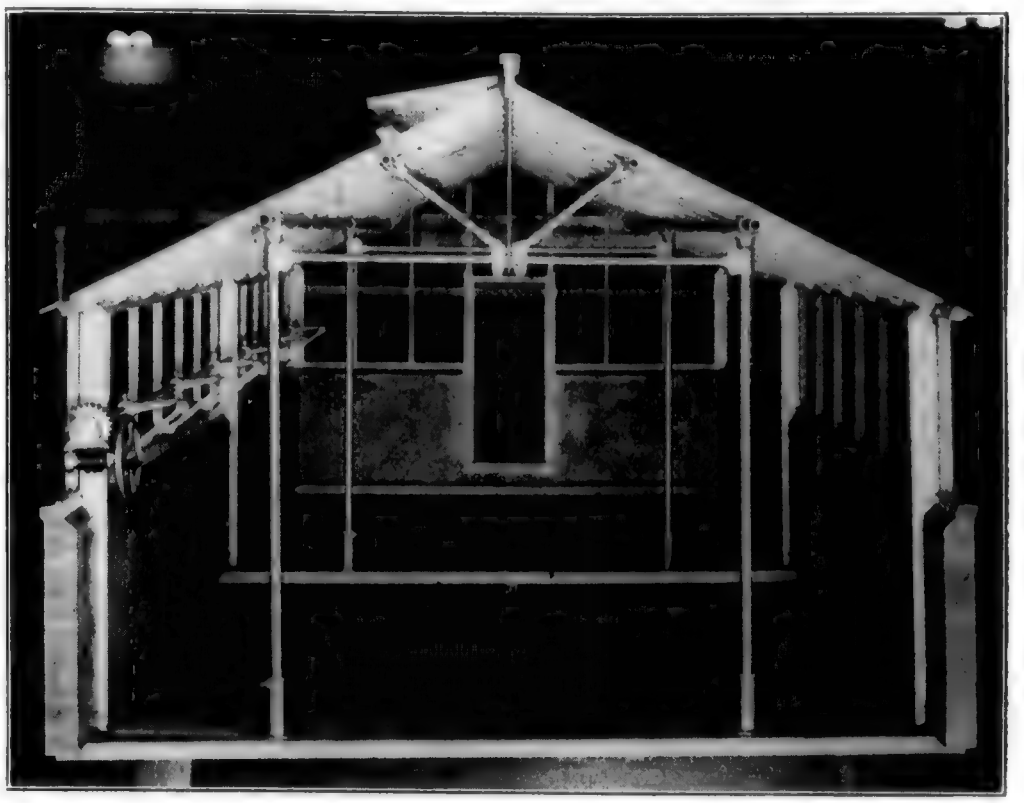
Callas.

The pots of callas, which have been lying on their sides since early in June, should now be overhauled. Some bulbs will be of fine quality; others not so good. Discard the dubious ones. The California bulbs are now so cheap it hardly pays to use any but the best. Some growers use beds or benches, others pots; probably a large majority use the latter. The benches may not yet be ready for the bulbs, in which case it would be better to pot the bulbs singly and later plant them out.

Callas love a generous soil. Fibrous loam, decayed cow manure, sand and a dash of bone meal and soot make a suitable mixture. Single bulbs may go in 6-inch and 7-inch pots. A 10-inch pot will hold three bulbs and a 12-inch five, but single bulbs to a pot are to be preferred. Stand all pots outdoors until frost threatens. Water sparingly until roots are being freely produced. It is easy to rot the tubers in hot weather if the soil gets too moist. Small bulbs planted outdoors early in the summer should not yet be disturbed. Let them remain where they are a month or so longer before potting.

Antirrhinums.

The earliest batch of antirrhinums are now in 4-inch pots and will be benched about the last part of August in a cool house. In the meantime they are kept outdoors on a bed of coal ashes. A later batch of cuttings, recently potted off, will come in useful for benching when the early mums, such as Golden Glow, Pacific and Polly Rose, are cut. It is a good time now to look over the stock plants in the field. If these were headed back, they will now give a nice crop of soft cuttings, which will be easily rooted. Select popular colors, white, yellow, pink and bright red being the best. Other shades are hardly worth growing. If you want a batch of plants to follow late chrysanthemums and have no cuttings, get some seed and sow at once. As a general rule, seed comes pretty true to color. The tall variety is the one you want.



Pot these off when big enough to handle. Grow along on a light bench, and by the middle of November you will have fine, stocky little plants to plant out.

Annual Lupines.

Lupines are still a good deal of a novelty in winter and early spring, in the markets. They are a welcome addition to the everyday florists' flowers and are eagerly sought for by the up-to-date store florists. Lupines require a cool house, 45 to 50 degrees at night. They can be flowered in deep boxes or benches. The latter give more root run and better spikes. The seed should be sown in rows eighteen inches apart, rather thinly. They soon germinate and should be grown as cool and airy as possible in the early stages of growth. A pink variety that is advertised a good deal, and sometimes sold as hybridus roseus, makes an excellent forcing variety and will easily bloom for Christmas if sown by the first week in September. L. mutabilis is a charming variety, with larger spikes than the pink variety. The colors are blue and white, and cream and pink. L. Hartwegii is another beautiful variety, which produces fine spikes under glass. There are pure white and azure blue varieties of this. If a bench is not yet at disposal, start a number of seeds separately in 3-inch pots outdoors and transplant later.

THE LORD & BURNHAM MODEL.

At the Rochester convention the Lord & Burnham Co., New York, exhibited a model greenhouse, 5x9 feet, so accurately built that every part of the construction was clearly shown. It was based on the plan used by the company in the erection of a house for the Robert Craig Co. at the new plant in Norwood, Pa. As stated in The Review's report of the convention, the model embodied every essential item of the construction, including the giant arch with V-shaped truss; also the concrete walls, with real wrought iron flat posts, carrying the shaft for a side ventilator, the sash being hinged directly to the eave plate.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS.

Taking the Buds.

The time of taking the buds is really the most critical time in chrysanthemum growing, because if the bud is taken too early it will not give the best results, and if it is taken too late the flowers lack depth, are small, and unsatisfactory generally. Much has been written on this subject and still the average grower is somewhat befogged when he reads about crown and second crown and terminal buds.

Older readers of these notes will recall that I wrote for years trying to elucidate this knotty subject of bud selection, by giving the reader dates after which it was safe to take the bud without worrying whether it was a first or tenth crown. The terms "first and second crown" are misleading, because a grower who planted his stock in April might have some of his varieties showing three crown buds by the first week in August and it might still be too early to take the bud with safety, while another grower who might be handling stock rooted in May or early June, and not getting a first crown to show before August 20, could take it with perfect safety. For most exhibition varieties, and a great many of the commercial kinds also, we have for years set our date around August 20, as the earliest time to take the buds.

Some varieties, such as Mrs. D. V. West, F. S. Vallis and the old Mme. Carnot, can be safely taken any time after August 1, while Col. Appleton and some of the pink varieties are better on a bud early in September.

I do not refer in these notes to the specially early varieties, such as Golden Glow, which is perhaps even now in flower, or Monrovia, which has buds just commencing to show color; nor do I refer to the very late varieties, such as Jeanne Nonin, W. H. Chadwick, W. R. Brock or others, which should be taken on late buds and as late as possible, but I am referring to the greater bulk of exhibition varieties, which is what the average grower is handling.

It is, of course, impossible for a grower with a large batch of plants to get all the varieties ready to take the bud just when one wants, and in such a case they should be taken as soon as possible after the date given.

Crown or Terminal Buds.

Those who have not been accustomed to handling the crown bud will look at it and then rub it off because they do not see any small buds around it. A true crown bud only has growth shoots around it, and if any or all of these shoots are carried on instead of being pinched off, they will eventually produce other buds at the terminus of their growth. These later buds have nothing but small buds around them, and that is the meaning of the term, "crown or terminal buds."

As a general rule, the commercial florist feels safer with a terminal bud, but he loses many dollars and considerable credit for his growing skill by not studying the crown bud and knowing "where he is at." If crown buds are showing a little too early they can be held somewhat stationary for a week or more, by permitting the surrounding growth shoots to make one leaf and then pinching them. This will act as a safety valve for the flow of sap, and the bud, when the shoots are finally removed, seems to come away without any trouble.

In some sections of the country the growers can handle an earlier bud than in others. This is particularly true in the mountainous sections and the most northerly part of the country, the cooler nights evidently being what the bud requires for its final development.

Growers in the extreme south may not have any success with a crown bud as early as August 20, although recent letters from Missouri and Mississippi indicate that it is the best time for the growth as far south as that section.

The systematic grower will always have a notebook and, when he is handling new varieties or experimenting, he will mark the plants and enter the record in the notebook, leaving room for the final result to be marked alongside. This record will be of the greatest value from year to year, as few of us are blessed with memories sufficiently long to keep track of such small details, and it is just these details that make success or possible failure.

CARNATIONS

CARNATIONS FOR CHRISTMAS.

Will you tell me how I should now treat my carnations? I bought nice, strong plants, that were pinched near the ground, and have now three nice shoots to the plant. They are planted in the greenhouse in solid beds and have made nice growth. Shall I pinch them back again, or let them go on and grow as high as they will and bloom whenever they will? I want to cut them for Christmas if possible. They were benched about a month ago.

L. M. S.

If you have no special use for the carnations until winter, they should be pinched back. Let the shoots run up until the buds just form before doing this. They will then break away stronger than if the soft growth is pinched. The plants should be gone over once a week and necessary pinching continued until the end of August, if early flowers are not wanted.

W. C.

ON SUB-IRRIGATED LAND.

Can carnations be grown on sub-irrigated soil successfully preparatory to benching, or is dry, high ground preferable, and for what reasons?

W. W. F. C.

It is a generally accepted fact that carnations grown on well-drained land will lift best, and that if they go through a moderate dry spell just prior to being lifted they will be in the best of condition to lift. The reason is that under those conditions the plants are hard, and will wilt but little as compared with those which have had an abundance of water. It matters but little whether the water came as rain or otherwise, as long as the plants made a soft growth. Size of plant cuts little figure with the expert grower, unless it be coupled with condition. Any undersized, well-matured plant, as long as it is not a runt, is preferable to a large, soft one, and will outstrip it inside of a short time. A. F. J. B.

TO PREVENT RUST.

What causes rust on carnations, and is there any treatment that will effectually check and remove it?

W. W. F. C.

Just where rust comes from, perhaps no one knows, except that, like all diseases of that nature, it is the result of certain conditions. A lack of fresh air, too much humidity, or any severe check will start it. That accounts for the fact that you so often see it start in the cutting bench, or right after potting, or after the plants are housed. In each instance a more or less humid atmosphere is maintained for a few days.

To check it, conditions just as nearly opposite as possible must be produced, according to how much of that sort of thing the plants may be able to stand. Ventilate freely and dust around with dry-slaked lime. If the plants are well established, you need not be afraid to dust plants and all, but if they have not yet taken hold, you would better not dust over them, else severe wilting and possible loss of plants may result.

FAIRY RING.

Kindly give me some information as to the disease of the enclosed carnation leaves, and its remedy. I am located in eastern Texas. M. L.

The specimens forwarded are affected with fairy ring, and you will have to get busy at once in vigorous style. In your hot southern climate you will find it an uphill job, as heat and moisture are what these fungoid diseases revel in. The fact is, too much moisture is really what starts it, and at this time of the year, when one will do almost anything that will afford relief from the intense heat, it makes it doubly hard to fight a disease of this nature. You will have to cut out spraying as a means of reducing the heat in your houses, for a time at least.

Pick off all you can of the affected leaves; then spray with Bordeaux mixture about twice each week. Water carefully, but not too sparingly, and only at the roots unless you see signs of red spider. Do everything you can to promote a strong, sturdy growth, but avoid any manure that is at all rank and liable to produce a foul atmosphere.

When cool weather sets in, you will have less trouble in combating the disease. When you have steam heat you can paint one of the pipes with sulphur, which will help purify the atmosphere.

METHOD OF BURNING CAYENNE.

Kindly let me know what method is used for burning Cayenne pepper to destroy thrips on American Beauty roses.

R. T.

The usual method of burning Cayenne is to place one-quarter of a pound on the top of tobacco stems when fumigating.

Another plan is to heat as many bricks as will suffice and place as much pepper on each brick as will cover it to the depth of half an inch. For instance, if the house is twenty-five feet wide, one brick would be needed for about every twenty feet of the length of the house. The bricks should be nearly red-hot. Repeat this twice a week. Keep the ventilators shut for one and one-half hours after operating. Ribes.

INSECTS ON DAHLIAS.

The ants, black potato beetles and other bugs are spoiling my dahlias as fast as they open. Please give me some remedy. R. F.

Spray your plants with a weak solution of Paris green for the beetles. One ounce will make ten gallons of liquid. This will not be strong enough to burn the foliage. This may not clean out the ants. A little cyanide of potassium, mixed in molasses and laid on pieces of paper here and there, will prove a potent attraction to them and will poison thousands. Use care in breaking up the cyanide crystals and be sure you have no cuts in your hands. It is a deadly poison and should never be placed where children, by any possibility, can reach it. C. W.

MAHERNIA ODORATA.

Will you please inform me as to the care of mahernias, and also if they can be propagated and how? W. G. B.

Mahernia odorata is probably the variety you have. This is a popular cool greenhouse plant. Propagation from soft cuttings in winter or early spring is an easy matter. Use an ordinary cutting bench, such as will root carnations or chrysanthemums. The plants in summer are much better grown outdoors. Owing to its twiggy, branching habit, it is easy to train this plant into any desired shape. It also makes an excellent basket subject. The mahernias are natives of South Africa and want cool treatment in winter.

MAKING LEAF-MOLD.

Will you kindly give me directions as to a quick way of making leaf-mold? When fall comes I usually have plenty of beech, oak, chestnut and maple leaves, but I have not much space in which to store them. C. T. M.

There is no quick way to reduce leaves to leaf-mold without partly destroying their quality as fertilizers. Gather the leaves into a heap and turn them over frequently, thus creating a gentle fermentation. By the next summer there will be a partial reduction to mold, which can be separated from the rest by passing it through a screen with a 1-inch mesh.

It takes from one to two years to reduce mold to the finer form. Ribes.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Carnation week was no exception to the general rule; the market simply marked time. It has been so all the twenty-six years the S. A. F. has existed; usually it is the dullest week of the year. Many of the leading wholesalers were at Rochester. Those who remained closed early. Some are still in the mountains and it will be another month before the tide comes in. In the meantime what stock arrives, if good, sells quickly. Prices have not advanced except for a few of the selected Beauties. General shipments are light, except of asters and gladioli. Carnations are hardly worthy of the name. Some of the asters now arriving are almost as good as the chrysanthemums. Of the latter it is interesting to note how many reach the market already. The new roses are beginning to arrive, but it will be another ten days before their influence is greatly manifest. Orchids are not abundant and little called for. Lilies have fallen. Of hydrangeas there is a great abundance. There is no limit to the gladioli. Few sell above 50 cents per hundred.

Most of the retail windows depend on asters and tritomas for their attractiveness. In some windows the water lily displays remain. Many are devoting the dull days to repainting and redecorating. Everyone seems optimistic as to the new season, and all are getting ready for the beginning of the contest.

John Connon.

Various Notes.

The last of the conventionists returned August 21. Many made side trips to the Falls, Toronto, or the Thousand Islands. The general verdict here is that the Rochester convention stands at the head of the procession, in extent, in management and in generous welcome and entertainment, with perfect weather, grand exhibits and complete harmony. Rochester has set a high mark, but Baltimore and southern hospitality together declare they will "raise the ante!"

Robert E. Berry, who has been connected with the management of the city parks for some years, has accepted a position of trust with the Elizabeth Nursery Co. He is a prominent and popular member of the New York Florists' Club, and its most enthusiastic bowler.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Shield, of Dalton, Mass., have been spending a week in New York.

Mr. and Mrs. J. T. D. Fulmer and Miss Perle Fulmer, of Des Moines, are in the city this week, returning home via Cleveland.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. A. Kuhl, of Pekin, Ill., are enjoying the last week of their month's holiday reveling in the excitement and attractions of the "Great White Way," after a prolonged stay at Asbury.

W. E. Marshall and his family are at Rockaway Point on their vacation, on his partner's yacht, fishing and sailing until September.

Ralph Gretsch has resumed complete control of his wholesale business at 52 West Twenty-eighth street, the connection with a firm in Madison, N. J., having been dissolved. Mr. Gretsch was at one time manager for O. V. Zangen.

B. S. Slinn, Jr., has returned from his camping season in New York state and is finishing his vacation at Atlantic City.

H. E. Froment gave up his intended trip to the convention in favor of the waters and seductive climate of Saratoga.

Work has begun in earnest with the seedsmen. Fall bulbs are being shipped in enormous quantities. Everybody is already busy. A great season is generally anticipated and salesmen are cheerful over what has been already accomplished. J. Austin Shaw.

PROVIDENCE.

The Market.

The week, as a whole, was quiet. The last couple of days, however, showed renewed activity because of several large funerals. One funeral, that of three young boys, all in one family, who were killed by the cars at Cowesett, had more than fifty pieces, including an immense gates ajar. Prices on cut flowers ranged about as last quoted. Stock is abundant.

Various Notes.

S. M. Vose is bringing in the first cuttings of his dahlia crop, which is fine and contains many of the latest varieties.

John Johnston, of Johnston Bros., has returned from a two weeks' vacation, well tanned.

Michael J. Leach, of Pawtucket; John A. Macrae, of this city, and F. E. Pearce, of Norwood, represented this state at the Rochester convention.

CARNATIONS

CARNATIONS FOR CHRISTMAS.

Will you tell me how I should now treat my carnations? I bought nice, strong plants, that were pinched near the ground, and have now three nice shoots to the plant. They are planted in the greenhouse in solid beds and have made nice growth. Shall I pinch them back again, or let them go on and grow as high as they will and bloom whenever they will? I want to cut them for Christmas if possible. They were benched about a month ago.

L. M. S.

If you have no special use for the carnations until winter, they should be pinched back. Let the shoots run up until the buds just form before doing this. They will then break away stronger than if the soft growth is pinched. The plants should be gone over once a week and necessary pinching continued until the end of August, if early flowers are not wanted.

W. C.

ON SUB-IRRIGATED LAND.

Can carnations be grown on sub-irrigated soil successfully preparatory to benching, or is dry, high ground preferable, and for what reasons?

W. W. F. C.

It is a generally accepted fact that carnations grown on well-drained land will lift best, and that if they go through a moderate dry spell just prior to being lifted they will be in the best of condition to lift. The reason is that under those conditions the plants are hard, and will wilt but little as compared with those which have had an abundance of water. It matters but little whether the water came as rain or otherwise, as long as the plants made a soft growth. Size of plant cuts little figure with the expert grower, unless it be coupled with condition. Any undersized, well-matured plant, as long as it is not a runt, is preferable to a large, soft one, and will outstrip it inside of a short time. A. F. J. B.

TO PREVENT RUST.

What causes rust on carnations, and is there any treatment that will effectually check and remove it?

W. W. F. C.

Just where rust comes from, perhaps no one knows, except that, like all diseases of that nature, it is the result of certain conditions. A lack of fresh air, too much humidity, or any severe check will start it. port Horticultural Society will be held September 20.

William B. Hazard has gone on a two weeks' vacation.

William Cushing, of the Quidnick Greenhouses, of Quidnick, has gone on a trip through the south for about a month or six weeks.

William Gray, formerly gardener for Horace Russell, at Southampton, L. I., is now gardener for Mrs. W. B. Leeds, at Rough Point, Newport.

Eric Bonereit, manager for Mrs. William Butcher, of Pitman street, this city, has gone abroad. During his extended absence he will visit England, Holland and Belgium.

Frederick Hoffman, of Pawtucket, is at Barrington for the summer, with his family.

Mr. and Mrs. James B. Canning, of this city, have been spending their vacation at the Graham cottage at Highland Beach, overlooking Narragansett bay.

George Hunt was one of the guests at the annual outing of the sixth ward republican representation in the city council, at Rocky Point, last week.

The Field Naturalists' Society of Central Falls will hold its annual flower show August 27 and 28.

Carnation day, for the benefit of the Twin City hospital, at Pawtucket, August 6, was a success. During the day more than 25,000 carnations were disposed of.

Miss Ada Brown has entered the employ of S. J. Reuter & Sons, at Westerly, as stenographer and bookkeeper.

Mr. and Mrs. Timothy L. O'Connor, of this city, are visiting at Narragansett Pier, making the trip by automobile.

The Newport County Agricultural Fair will begin September 20, at Portsmouth, and continue four days.

Frederick C. Green, superintendent of parks of this city, attended the annual convention of the American Association of Park Superintendents at Harrisburg, Pa., last week. W. H. M.

HARTFORD, CONN.

The condition of crops in Connecticut this year is eight per cent better than the yearly average for the last ten years. A great many people from the middle west are investigating the many opportunities that Connecticut offers.

The Hartford Market Gardeners' Association, at a recent meeting in the rooms of the board of trade, talked over plans for an exhibit which the association will make at the Connecticut fair in Charter Oak park. A committee was elected, the chairman of which is Horace B. Williams, of East Hartford, to arrange for the exhibit.

In response to an invitation from the Connecticut Agricultural College, at Storrs, to inspect the crop of vegetables at that institution, the members of the Market Gardeners' Association went there on a tour of inspection, August 25. Extensive experiments in growing vegetables are conducted at Storrs. J. W. Crowel, secretary of the association, made the arrangements for the trip. T. L. B.

Allentown, Pa.—Ernest Ashley, the florist at Fourth and Tilghman streets, is building another greenhouse on the Bethlehem pike.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

The usual glut of poor summer flowers is still on. All the good stock finds eager buyers, while the other finds its way to the ash barrel. The prices are normal for the season.

The demand is fickle. It always calls for more of a certain kind of flower than is available. For instance, at present Rhea Reid and pink roses are comparatively scarce and the call for them is good. On the other hand, there are plenty of American Beauties and a small call. The same is true of longiflorum lilies; there are plenty of them and not a large request. The good asters and gladioli are taken in a hurry at fair prices, while the poorer ones help congest the refrigerators. Valley is now in the market every day.

The green goods market is quiet. Smilax is in small supply. Some good plumosus can be had.

Various Notes.

The Ohio Valley Exposition, which opens August 29, will undoubtedly help business. The speed boat races on the river and the exposition itself, with the opera, will attract thousands of outsiders. There has been some talk of having an exhibition for florists, but nothing has been definitely decided. J. Chas. McCullough says that he will be able to give definite information within four or five days.

R. Witterstaetter has just received two carloads of pots. He has almost finished planting his carnations in the houses. In spite of the dry weather, they lift easily and suffer little after planting in the benches. Mr. Witterstaetter has found a heavy demand for carnation plants from the field, a demand which he was unable to fill, as he scarcely had enough for himself.

Weiland & Olinger have been receiving large cuts of White Killarney, which, considering the flower and the season of the year, hold up wonderfully well and make a welcome addition to the stock of white flowers in the retail stores.

E. G. Gillett is receiving a large cut of Beauties from Heller.

Large shipments of excellent longiflorums are still arriving at Wm. Murphy's.

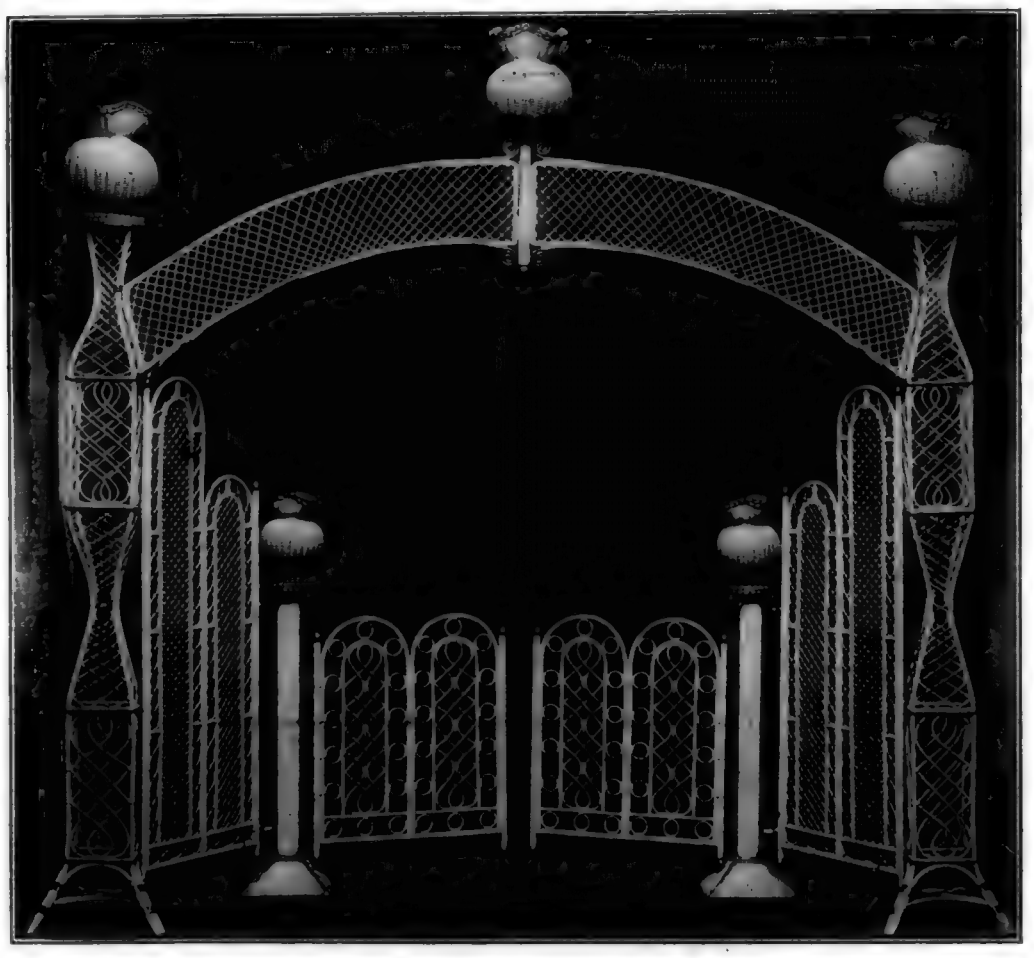
C. E. Critchell has a large supply of asters of all varieties and colors. After leaving Rochester, he went directly to Mackinac Island to join his wife and little son, C. E., Jr.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Peterson went to the Thousand Islands from the convention.

Wm. Murphy reports fishing better than for years at Snow Islands.

Miss Shanahan has returned from her vacation, spent in the north.

Mrs. Hider and party from Hillsboro, O., spent August 21 in Cincinnati and at Coney Island.



Charlie Windram, who is in North Dakota, has found game so plentiful that he has written home for his gun.

FOR WIDE-AWAKE RETAILERS.

The illustration gives a clear idea of the new wedding gates and arch which Mr. Bayersdorfer has made for the special purpose of meeting a variety of needs. The arch or the gates may be used separately; or the whole piece may be used together, as in the photograph; or they may be used, foliage-covered, as a music screen or to hide a stairway, or as a background for flowers. The material is rattan and enamel. The holders surmounting the arch and on the gate posts are intended for pots, but can also be used for vases of cut flowers. Phil.

Medicine Lodge, Kan.—John L. Brady has found it necessary to retire from business on account of failing health.

Some of the Newer Supplies for Retailers.

Groton, Mass.—H. Huebner was confined to his home for several weeks with rheumatism.

Superior, Wis.—F. H. Rockwood is adding one more house to his range at 2419 Elmira avenue.

Bar Harbor, Me.—Frederick H. Moses was recently reported to be seriously ill and under the constant care of a physician.

Independence, Kan.—Chris Schmidt has begun business here as a florist, at the corner of Eighth and Sycamore streets.

Tyler, Tex.—This year has been a prosperous one for James Whitten, in spite of the backward spring. Trade has been so good that it has almost cleaned out his stock of plants.

Portsmouth, O.—The store of the Herms Floral Co., at the Majestic Theater corner, was recently entered by burglars and robbed of $55. The thieves gained an entrance through the roof, which they reached from the theater.

Evansville, Ind.—Part of the greenhouses of Julius Niednagel & Sons are directly in the path of a proposed extension of Bell street, and a member of the firm recently appeared before the Board of Works to plead for delay in the opening of the street, as the moving of the greenhouses just at present would be attended with great expense.

Charlevoix, Mich.—B. B. Blair now has his hands full in taking care of the summer trade in this favorite holiday resort. His spring plant trade was a record-breaker. Field carnations, he says, suffered from the drought in July, but made rapid growth later. Sweet peas were not up to the usual northern Michigan standard, but asters are fine.

Lake Linden, Mich.—The three greenhouses which are being erected here for the Pearce Hardware & Furniture Co. are nearly completed. The boiler house has been finished and the boiler has been installed. Owing to the large flower trade which the Pearce company has already established here, there will be a ready sale for the output of the new houses.

New Castle, Ind.—William Dittmann recently returned from three weeks' fishing at Lake Manitou and has brought with him a big bucket of bass. He says he had the best time of his life. His Beauties are in extra fine condition, with prospects for the best year since he has been in business. He has all two-year-old stock planted over and will begin cutting in about ten days or two weeks, with good stems. Mr. Dittmann and wife plan to make a trip to Cuba and Porto Rica late this fall.

Independence, Mo.—S. B. Ayres finds business ahead of his facilities and recently has been at Chicago buying material for another house.

Morrison, Ill.—The directors of the R. R. Davis Co., recently incorporated, have elected the following officers: President, R. R. Davis; vice-president and treasurer, J. W. Steiner; secretary, Frank Davis.

Kalamazoo, Mich.—The office of James Fraser, proprietor of the greenhouses at the Mountain Home cemetery, was recently burglarized twice within the same week. The thieves secured $40 in cash, besides some small articles.

Kennett Square, Pa.—A greenhouse, 60x200, of the King materials, was recently built here for Yeatman & Way, and will be used for tomatoes and mushrooms. Henry G. Miller, representing the King Construction Co., had charge of the erection of the house.

Farmington, Utah—The Miller Floral Co. has completed its first rose house, 45x300 feet, and expects soon to build a house of similar dimensions for carnations. The firm has already planted 6,000 roses, which promise to be in shape for producing a good fall crop.

South Bend, Ind.—Three tracts of land, formerly the property of the South Bend Floral Co., were recently sold at public auction for a total consideration of $3,780. This transaction practically ended the affairs of the receivership of the concern. Charles E. Campbell was the receiver.

Belvidere, Ill.—B. Eldridge is making extensive improvements at his greenhouses in Fairview. The changes include the erection of a concrete chimney, fifty feet in height and thirty inches in inside diameter. Mr. Eldridge is planning, it is said, to grow large quantities of roses and carnations for the wholesale trade.

Hartford, Conn.—At the funeral of F. B. Edwards, a well-known druggist, one of the most notable of the many floral pieces was a large panel, made by Page F. Potter, who has greenhouses at 232 Main street and a store at 653 Main street. The panel was ordered by the Druggists' Association of Hartford. It was eight feet high and three and one-half feet wide, and was mounted on an easel. It was made of roses, sweet peas and carnations. At the top was a clock dial, with the hands pointing to 9:40, the hour at which Mr. Edwards died. Underneath this was a druggist's pestle and mortar. Surmounting all was a long silk ribbon bearing the inscription, "The Sad Hour."

Toledo, O.—The new range of Dietsch construction, that is being built for Miller Bros., is rapidly nearing completion.

Rochester, N. Y.—B. S. Blake & Son have been granted a patent on a new lock ring clip which locks a string wire to the plant stake.

Cleveland, O.—A. A. Hart, the Lake avenue florist, with his daughter Gertrude, sailed on the Cincinnati, July 16, for Hamburg, for three months' travel through Europe.

Des Moines, Ia.—An awning on the store of the Guthrie-Lorenz Co. was recently torn from its fastenings by a storm and hurled through the plate glass show window.

White Marsh, Md.—The fourth annual dahlia show of R. Vincent, Jr., & Sons Co., given in connection with the harvest home festival of Ebenezer church, will be held September 26 to 29.

Independence, Kan.—William Hasselmann, formerly of the firm of Hasler & Hasselmann, at Newton, Kan., has removed to this place and is erecting three greenhouses, each 21x75, at Railroad and Tenth streets. He sold his half interest in the Newton business to his partner, F. Hasler.

Nantucket, Mass.—H. H. Voorneveld, proprietor of the Floralia Flower Store, on Liberty street, is attracting attention here as a remarkably successful grower of outdoor sweet peas, Canterbury bells and other flowers. His garden contains a strikingly beautiful array of sweet peas—whole hedges of them, many of them over six feet high. This town, Mr. Voorneveld says, is steadily gaining in popularity as a summer resort and is becoming more attractive each year, as the people give increasing attention to horticulture.

Paxton, Ill.—In order to dispose of a large stock of surplus carnations, which otherwise would have been dumped on the rubbish heap, Addems, Morgan & Co. recently advertised in a local paper that on a certain day they would give one-half dozen of those flowers to each child that applied between 8 and 10 o'clock a. m., limited, however, one child to each family. In this manner they brought smiles to the faces of 203 children who came, giving each one ten carnations, instead of the six promised. This firm also reports that business, both wholesale and retail, has been better this year than ever before, and they are unable to keep pace with the orders for young stock. They are putting a new plate glass window and vestibule entrance in the front of their store, and at their establishment at Loda they are building a new propagating house, 100 feet long.

Frederick Hoffman, of Pawtucket, is at Barrington for the summer, with his family.

Mr. and Mrs. James B. Canning, of this city, have been spending their vacation at the Graham cottage at Highland Beach, overlooking Narragansett bay.

George Hunt was one of the guests at the annual outing of the sixth ward republican representation in the city council, at Rocky Point, last week.

The Field Naturalists' Society of Central Falls will hold its annual flower show August 27 and 28.

Carnation day, for the benefit of the Twin City hospital, at Pawtucket, August 6, was a success. During the day more than 25,000 carnations were disposed of.

Miss Ada Brown has entered the employ of S. J. Reuter & Sons, at Westerly, as stenographer and bookkeeper.

Mr. and Mrs. Timothy L. O'Connor, of this city, are visiting at Narragansett Pier, making the trip by automobile.

The Newport County Agricultural Fair will begin September 20, at Portsmouth, and continue four days.

Frederick C. Green, superintendent of parks of this city, attended the annual convention of the American Association of Park Superintendents at Harrisburg, Pa., last week. W. H. M.

HARTFORD, CONN.

The condition of crops in Connecticut this year is eight per cent better than the yearly average for the last ten years. A great many people from the middle west are investigating the many opportunities that Connecticut offers.

The Hartford Market Gardeners' Association, at a recent meeting in the rooms of the board of trade, talked over plans for an exhibit which the association will make at the Connecticut fair in Charter Oak park. A committee was elected, the chairman of which is Horace B. Williams, of East Hartford, to arrange for the exhibit.

In response to an invitation from the Connecticut Agricultural College, at Storrs, to inspect the crop of vegetables at that institution, the members of the Market Gardeners' Association went there on a tour of inspection, August 25. Extensive experiments in growing vegetables are conducted at Storrs. J. W. Crowel, secretary of the association, made the arrangements for the trip. T. L. B.

Allentown, Pa.—Ernest Ashley, the florist at Fourth and Tilghman streets, is building another greenhouse on the Bethlehem pike.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

The usual glut of poor summer flowers is still on. All the good stock finds eager buyers, while the other finds its way to the ash barrel. The prices are normal for the season.

The demand is fickle. It always calls for more of a certain kind of flower than is available. For instance, at present Rhea Reid and pink roses are comparatively scarce and the call for them is good. On the other hand, there are plenty of American Beauties and a small call. The same is true of longiflorum lilies; there are plenty of them and not a large request. The good asters and gladioli are taken in a hurry at fair prices, while the poorer ones help congest the refrigerators. Valley is now in the market every day.

The green goods market is quiet. Smilax is in small supply. Some good plumosus can be had.

Various Notes.

The Ohio Valley Exposition, which opens August 29, will undoubtedly help business. The speed boat races on the river and the exposition itself, with the opera, will attract thousands of outsiders. There has been some talk of having an exhibition for florists, but nothing has been definitely decided. J. Chas. McCullough says that he will be able to give definite information within four or five days.

R. Witterstaetter has just received two carloads of pots. He has almost finished planting his carnations in the houses. In spite of the dry weather, they lift easily and suffer little after planting in the benches. Mr. Witterstaetter has found a heavy demand for carnation plants from the field, a demand which he was unable to fill, as he scarcely had enough for himself.

Weiland & Olinger have been receiving large cuts of White Killarney, which, considering the flower and the season of the year, hold up wonderfully well and make a welcome addition to the stock of white flowers in the retail stores.

E. G. Gillett is receiving a large cut of Beauties from Heller.

Large shipments of excellent longiflorums are still arriving at Wm. Murphy's.

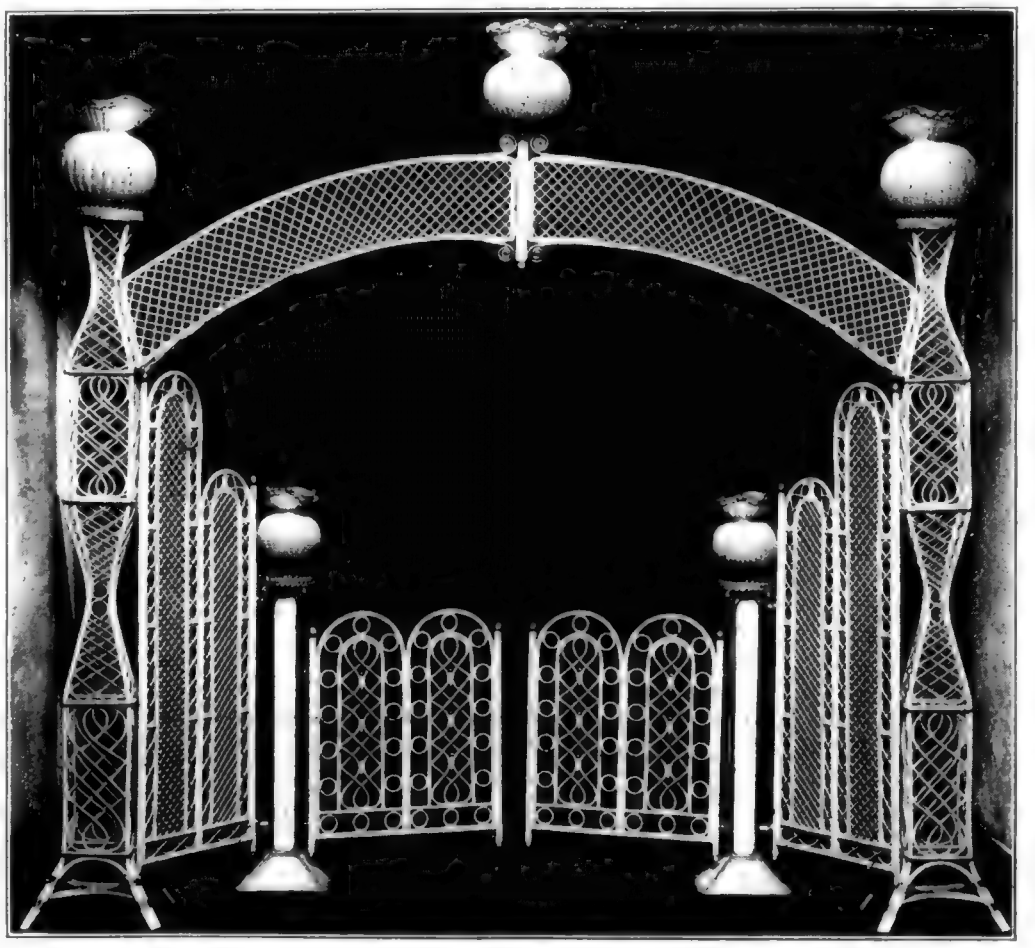
C. E. Critchell has a large supply of asters of all varieties and colors. After leaving Rochester, he went directly to Mackinac Island to join his wife and little son, C. E., Jr.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Peterson went to the Thousand Islands from the convention.

Wm. Murphy reports fishing better than for years at Snow Islands.

Miss Shanahan has returned from her vacation, spent in the north.

Mrs. Hider and party from Hillsboro, O., spent August 21 in Cincinnati and at Coney Island.



Charlie Windram, who is in North Dakota, has found game so plentiful that he has written home for his gun.

FOR WIDE-AWAKE RETAILERS.

The illustration gives a clear idea of the new wedding gates and arch which Mr. Bayersdorfer has made for the special purpose of meeting a variety of needs. The arch or the gates may be used separately; or the whole piece may be used together, as in the photograph; or they may be used, foliage-covered, as a music screen or to hide a stairway, or as a background for flowers. The material is rattan and enamel. The holders surmounting the arch and on the gate posts are intended for pots, but can also be used for vases of cut flowers. Phil.

Medicine Lodge, Kan.—John L. Brady has found it necessary to retire from business on account of failing health.

NEWS, NOTES AND COMMENTS

Groton, Mass.—H. Huebner was confined to his home for several weeks with rheumatism.

Superior, Wis.—F. H. Rockwood is adding one more house to his range at 2419 Elmira avenue.

Bar Harbor, Me.—Frederick H. Moses was recently reported to be seriously ill and under the constant care of a physician.

Independence, Kan.—Chris Schmidt has begun business here as a florist, at the corner of Eighth and Sycamore streets.

Tyler, Tex.—This year has been a prosperous one for James Whitten, in spite of the backward spring. Trade has been so good that it has almost cleaned out his stock of plants.

Portsmouth, O.—The store of the Herms Floral Co., at the Majestic Theater corner, was recently entered by burglars and robbed of $55. The thieves gained an entrance through the roof, which they reached from the theater.

Evansville, Ind.—Part of the greenhouses of Julius Niednagel & Sons are directly in the path of a proposed extension of Bell street, and a member of the firm recently appeared before the Board of Works to plead for delay in the opening of the street, as the moving of the greenhouses just at present would be attended with great expense.

Charlevoix, Mich.—B. B. Blair now has his hands full in taking care of the summer trade in this favorite holiday resort. His spring plant trade was a record-breaker. Field carnations, he says, suffered from the drought in July, but made rapid growth later. Sweet peas were not up to the usual northern Michigan standard, but asters are fine.

Lake Linden, Mich.—The three greenhouses which are being erected here for the Pearce Hardware & Furniture Co. are nearly completed. The boiler house has been finished and the boiler has been installed. Owing to the large flower trade which the Pearce company has already established here, there will be a ready sale for the output of the new houses.

New Castle, Ind.—William Dittmann recently returned from three weeks' fishing at Lake Manitou and has brought with him a big bucket of bass. He says he had the best time of his life. His Beauties are in extra fine condition, with prospects for the best year since he has been in business. He has all two-year-old stock planted over and will begin cutting in about ten days or two weeks, with good stems. Mr. Dittmann and wife plan to make a trip to Cuba and Porto Rica late this fall.

Independence, Mo.—S. B. Ayres finds business ahead of his facilities and recently has been at Chicago buying material for another house.

Morrison, Ill.—The directors of the R. R. Davis Co., recently incorporated, have elected the following officers: President, R. R. Davis; vice-president and treasurer, J. W. Steiner; secretary, Frank Davis.

Kalamazoo, Mich.—The office of James Fraser, proprietor of the greenhouses at the Mountain Home cemetery, was recently burglarized twice within the same week. The thieves secured $40 in cash, besides some small articles.

Kennett Square, Pa.—A greenhouse, 60x200, of the King materials, was recently built here for Yeatman & Way, and will be used for tomatoes and mushrooms. Henry G. Miller, representing the King Construction Co., had charge of the erection of the house.

Farmington, Utah—The Miller Floral Co. has completed its first rose house, 45x300 feet, and expects soon to build a house of similar dimensions for carnations. The firm has already planted 6,000 roses, which promise to be in shape for producing a good fall crop.

South Bend, Ind.—Three tracts of land, formerly the property of the South Bend Floral Co., were recently sold at public auction for a total consideration of $3,780. This transaction practically ended the affairs of the receivership of the concern. Charles E. Campbell was the receiver.

Belvidere, Ill.—B. Eldridge is making extensive improvements at his greenhouses in Fairview. The changes include the erection of a concrete chimney, fifty feet in height and thirty inches in inside diameter. Mr. Eldridge is planning, it is said, to grow large quantities of roses and carnations for the wholesale trade.

Hartford, Conn.—At the funeral of F. B. Edwards, a well-known druggist, one of the most notable of the many floral pieces was a large panel, made by Page F. Potter, who has greenhouses at 232 Main street and a store at 653 Main street. The panel was ordered by the Druggists' Association of Hartford. It was eight feet high and three and one-half feet wide, and was mounted on an easel. It was made of roses, sweet peas and carnations. At the top was a clock dial, with the hands pointing to 9:40, the hour at which Mr. Edwards died. Underneath this was a druggist's pestle and mortar. Surmounting all was a long silk ribbon bearing the inscription, "The Sad Hour."

Toledo, O.—The new range of Dietsch construction, that is being built for Miller Bros., is rapidly nearing completion.

Rochester, N. Y.—B. S. Blake & Son have been granted a patent on a new lock ring clip which locks a string wire to the plant stake.

Cleveland, O.—A. A. Hart, the Lake avenue florist, with his daughter Gertrude, sailed on the Cincinnati, July 16, for Hamburg, for three months' travel through Europe.

Des Moines, Ia.—An awning on the store of the Guthrie-Lorenz Co. was recently torn from its fastenings by a storm and hurled through the plate glass show window.

White Marsh, Md.—The fourth annual dahlia show of R. Vincent, Jr., & Sons Co., given in connection with the harvest home festival of Ebenezer church, will be held September 26 to 29.

Independence, Kan.—William Hasselmann, formerly of the firm of Hasler & Hasselmann, at Newton, Kan., has removed to this place and is erecting three greenhouses, each 21x75, at Railroad and Tenth streets. He sold his half interest in the Newton business to his partner, F. Hasler.

Nantucket, Mass.—H. H. Voorneveld, proprietor of the Floralia Flower Store, on Liberty street, is attracting attention here as a remarkably successful grower of outdoor sweet peas, Canterbury bells and other flowers. His garden contains a strikingly beautiful array of sweet peas—whole hedges of them, many of them over six feet high. This town, Mr. Voorneveld says, is steadily gaining in popularity as a summer resort and is becoming more attractive each year, as the people give increasing attention to horticulture.

Paxton, Ill.—In order to dispose of a large stock of surplus carnations, which otherwise would have been dumped on the rubbish heap, Addems, Morgan & Co. recently advertised in a local paper that on a certain day they would give one-half dozen of those flowers to each child that applied between 8 and 10 o'clock a. m., limited, however, one child to each family. In this manner they brought smiles to the faces of 203 children who came, giving each one ten carnations, instead of the six promised. This firm also reports that business, both wholesale and retail, has been better this year than ever before, and they are unable to keep pace with the orders for young stock. They are putting a new plate glass window and vestibule entrance in the front of their store, and at their establishment at Loda they are building a new propagating house, 100 feet long.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Park Superintendent David A. Seymour has announced that two new greenhouses will be erected in Delaware and Humboldt parks.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Incorporated by Act of Congress, March 4, '01

Officers for 1910: President, F. R. Pierson, Tarrytown, N. Y.; vice-president, F. W. Vick, Rochester, N. Y.; secretary, H. B. Dorner, Urbana, Ill.; treasurer, W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, N. Y.

Special convention and National Flower Show, Boston, Mass., March 26 to April 1, 1911.

Annual convention, Baltimore, Md., August 15 to 18, 1911.

Results bring advertising.
The Review brings results.

The National Council of Horticulture has begun its midsummer press service with articles on "Starting Plants for Next Year," "Strawberry Plants Set Out in Summer," and "The White or Madonna Lily."

J. S. Brunton, editor of one of the English trade papers, each spring conducts a party on a tour of some country of trade interest and next season will bring a score or more of British nurserymen and florists to the National Flower Show at Boston.

If you have a surplus of field-grown carnation plants you can find a quick buyer for them through the classified department of The Review. Field-grown plants are scarce in almost all parts of the country and such as there are are only medium size.

This is too big a country to please everybody in the matter of locating the S. A. F. convention. The thing to do may be to adopt President Pierson's suggestion of two meetings a year, holding one in the east and the other in the west. Consolidate with the winter meeting the meetings of the Carnation Society and Rose Society, and then everyone ought to be happy.

OUTDOOR WORK.

It is a welcome relief when the temperature is up in the high nineties to let all hands get outdoors. There is always plenty to do at this season. No matter how frequently we stir the soil, weeds will come, and they grow with such rapidity at this season that in a week or ten days, if given a free hand, they will practically smother other crops. Hand weeding is a necessity now, but it must be done with care, or many plants will be pulled up which it is desired to leave. Many of the more robust weeds can be cut off near the ground, which is better than running the risk of pulling up flowering plants. Place all weeds in heaps and wheel or cart them away. Do not leave them to rot, grow again, or look unsightly. You can probably find some low piece of ground suitable to dump them, where they will rot and eventually make a little vegetable mold.

PRIMULAS.

During hot weather the primulas, in common with many other plants, are greatly benefited by being lightly sprayed over several times a day. Be sure to keep them shaded from the hot sun, but expose the plants altogether on cool, cloudy days, as well as at night. The dews refresh the plants and removing the sashes helps to keep them sturdy.

The obconicas will already be throwing up some flower spikes. Pinch these out as fast as they appear. To keep the plants compact and well leaved, they must never be allowed to crowd one another, and it will be necessary to give them a spacing apart once in ten days. Scratch over the surface soil. Remove any weeds and pick off any decaying leaves when doing this.

Pots five and six inches in diameter are suitable sizes for flowering the Chinese section in, but Kewensis and obconica, if good sized plants are wanted, should have 7-inch pots. Of course, nice plants can be grown in the smaller sizes. A suitable compost for the last potting would be equal parts of fibrous loam, rotted cow manure and partially rotted leaves, adding a dash of soot and some sharp sand to it—the latter for porosity, the former to assist in keeping the foliage a dark green color.

OBITUARY.

Frederick A. Katoll.

F. A. Katoll, a well-known florist of 976 Ellicott street, Buffalo, N. Y., died August 16, as the result of a fractured skull.

While Mr. Katoll was seated in a buggy in the yard in the rear of his home, Saturday afternoon, August 13, the horse started up suddenly and Mr. Katoll was thrown to the ground. He landed on the back of his head.

Mr. Katoll was 74 years old.

Louis Dragon.

The death of Louis Dragon, at his home on Warwick avenue, Lakewood, R. I., on Tuesday, August 8, removes a well-known man in the florists' and gardeners' circles of that vicinity. For a score of years, up to about two years ago, he did a considerable business in growing bedding stock, small vegetables and shrubs, which he sold from wagons which visited the different sections thereabouts. He was 65 years of age, and removed to Lakewood from Woonsocket, R. I., about 1890. He purchased an abandoned farm, built a number of small greenhouses, and did a thriving business. W. H. M.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

Demand steadily gathered volume last week, the record for the seven days proving to be an excellent one. Of course it is midsummer business, but for all that there is considerable real life to the demand. No high prices can be exacted, but there is a fair sale for any good stock offered at moderate prices. The present week opened with intense heat and little local demand, but there was a good number of shipping orders for Monday, and the cooler weather following Monday night's storm has helped all along the line.

The aster is the predominant flower. Supplies are now at their height. Quality is much better than earlier in the season; much splendid stock now is available. The receipts are not unwieldy in any grade. Although some houses say the buyers back off if the price named is not strictly of the popular variety, still all the good asters clean up without much delay, and there is enough funeral work to take up all the short-stemmed asters at low figures.

Gladioli occupy second place in point of present importance. It is the same old story: there is good sale for America, such reds as Mrs. King and such whites as Augusta, with little sale for the mixtures of colors. Augusta, the best white, is not quite so plentiful as it has been, but there are increased supplies of King and other reds, which, though they sell well, show declining values. The average price of America also has fallen, more because of deterioration in quality than because of other factors. Fancy America still sells better than anything else in gladioli.

Beauties are not in large supply, but there are enough to go around; all orders can be filled with good stock from young plants. Of roses the supply is equal to all requirements, for the call has slackened quite a little since strictly first-class asters became available. Rose crops are not heavy with the average grower, but those who made plans for a summer cut are sending in nice stock in considerable quantity and finding fully as good a market as they anticipated. The summer roses are paying well. Splendid My Maryland is seen, and it runs Killarney a close race for popularity. Kaiserin is not abundant. Brides and Maids are practically out of the race.

Easter lilies are abundant; short-stemmed stock may be had at low prices. Auratums are slow sale. A few carnations arrive. Valley once more is abundant, and some of it is of fine quality. The summer flowers are not in large supply and meet with little demand. The green goods market also is quiet.

Bassett & Washburn Picnic.

The annual picnic of the employees of Bassett & Washburn, with their families, was held at a grove near Hinsdale, August 19. The employees arranged the affair and supplied all the refreshments, the firm contributing the prizes, in addition to shutting down at 10 a. m. for the day. Ned Washburn was general manager of the sports, prizes being won as follows:

Championship race, 100 yards—Alex Linn, scarf pin and cuff links.
Sewing race—Mrs. Reardon, belt pin.
Sausage contest—Emil Oberg, shirt.
Race, girls under 16—Miss Lockman, roller skates.
Shoe race—Paul Weiss and David Lundin, knives.
Nail drawing contest for ladies—Mrs. Lundin, handbag.
Married men's race—David Lundin, umbrella.
Ladies' race—Margaret Lynaugh, umbrella.
Sack race—John Johanson, pipe.
Pinning tail on donkey—Andrew Benson, necktie.

The A. L. Randall Co. now is a member of the Chicago Association of Commerce.

Hoerber Bros., Des Plaines, are just finishing their range of eleven new houses. Much planting remains to be done. They say no further additions are at present in contemplation.

C. W. McKellar and Mrs. McKellar returned August 20 after a two months' auto tour of the east.

Phil Schupp, at J. A. Budlong's, points with pride to the white asters and asks, "Don't they beat the early white mums?"

G. H. Pieser, president of Kennicott Bros. Co., has returned from Colorado, where he spent a fortnight. While at Colorado Springs he attended the summer flower show. Mike Fink is back from New York, where he went after the Rochester convention.

The 10-year-old son of Joseph Brooks, of Morton Grove, who was in Augustana hospital for ten weeks last spring, as the result of a fall on the ice, finds himself with a swollen and stiff knee. The doctors want to operate again, but Mrs. Brooks has not yet consented.

N. J. Wietor and John Sinner returned to the market August 22 after a fortnight's fishing trip to northern Wisconsin. Mr. Sinner says Mr. Wietor caught the largest fish, a 24-pound muskie.

Fritz Bahr made the Thousand Islands trip after the convention.

Winterson's Seed Store has advices that the French bulbs will arrive August 25, with the Dutch stock due in a few days.

There has been a steady stream of visitors at the plant of Poehlmann Bros. Co., Morton Grove, all this month. John Poehlmann, president of the company, is vacationing this week.

W. P. Kyle, of Kyle & Foerster, says this has been the shortest summer he ever put in; in fact, that it has not seemed like summer at all.

John Kruchten this week is giving his store its annual coat of white paint.

Klehm's Nursery greenhouses are about half planted. All the stock is grown for their own local retail trade and is not wanted until later.

John Zech says he thinks he will lay his plans for a trip to Baltimore next August and will try for a position on the bowling team.

Miss Minnie Wattman is again on duty in E. C. Amling's office, after her vacation at Torch lake.

Miss Cooper, manager for the Auburndale Goldfish Co., is enjoying a two weeks' vacation at Paw Paw lake, Mich.

The George Wittbold Co. now has a direct telephone wire connecting the Edgebrook greenhouses with the main establishment on Buckingham place. This company finds itself unable to give the branch store on North Clark street proper attention, and is offering the branch for sale. Louis Wittbold says the branch has always been profitable, sometimes running as high as $5,000 a year. An auto, of the buggy type, is now being used to look after the landscape work.

Mr. Andersen, of the Andersen Specialty Co., manufacturers of Daylite glass cleaner, is now doing a turn at jury service.

At Peter Reinberg's they report as a visitor William H. Englehart, treasurer and manager of the Idlewild Greenhouses, Memphis, Tenn., who is preparing for a big season.

W. Logan Kring, of Kring Bros., Fairbury, Ill., was the guest of E. C. Amling over Sunday.

The Market.

Demand for stock has been quite good, no serious complaints are being offered, and everything seems to move fairly well. At present the market is a little long on lilies, which have to be sacrificed in some cases, but at the same time we hardly know how we should get along without them. There is a good supply of roses, which sell well.

There is more complaint offered these days against the weather than anything else, as it has been hot and dry for many weeks. The absence of rain is doing considerable damage to all outdoor stock.

Various Notes.

Things look rather upside down around the plant of the Miami Floral Co., as excavation has commenced for their new boiler room, which will be 37x55 feet, with a pit eleven feet deep. The building is to be strictly fireproof, being built of concrete to the ground

The Market.

There is no change in the flower market. Plenty of design work is being turned out this week. Good cut flowers are in demand, though scarce. Lilium giganteum and L. speciosum are excellent, while asters, sweet peas and carnations are only fair. Roses are coming on well, especially Beauties.

Various Notes.

F. W. Bannister, representing H. D. Mann & Co., Syracuse, N. Y., stopped in Erie on his way to the convention at Rochester.

Miss Thekla Baur has returned from a Canadian trip.

J. T. Cokely, of the Scranton Florists' Supply Co., was in Erie August 20. Mr. Cokely had been at the convention, and left Erie for Youngstown. He was having a successful trip and reported business excellent.

PHILADELPHIA.

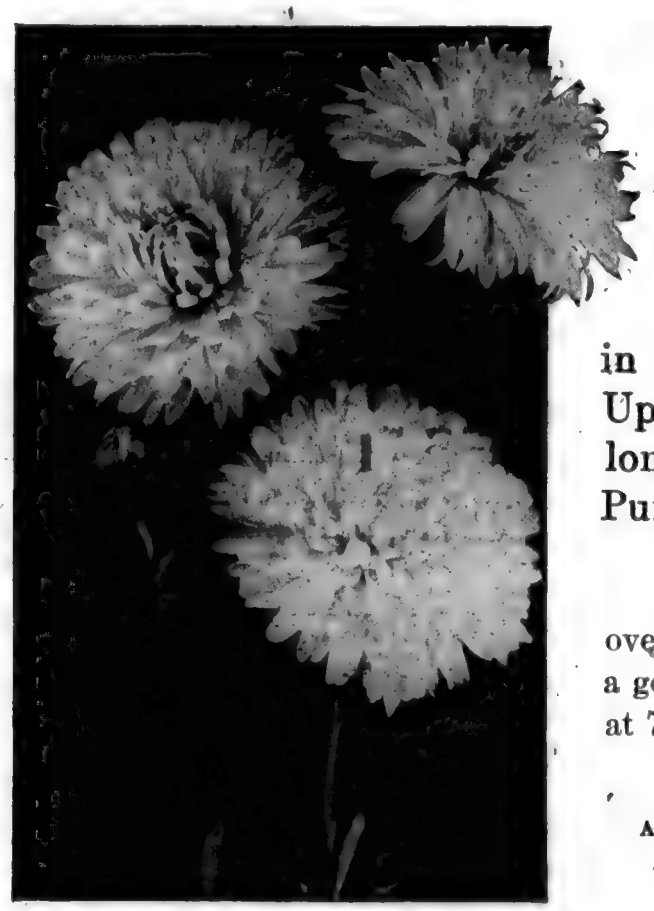
The Rising Eastern Market.

Lancaster county is coming to the front as an aster-producing section; the stock coming from that county merits the approval of the wholesalers and is classed today with the best local asters, rather few in number, and the splendid stock from western New York. The market is rather dull, not a great deal doing on most days of the week. There is more demand for asters, some of the wholesalers say, than for all the other flowers on the list combined.

To the expert cut flower salesman a glance at a flower is sufficient to determine its asking price, that is, the price the flower ought to bring with a favorable market. All our cut flower salesmen agree that the aster is not bringing as much today as it should bring, considering the high quality. This condition may be altered at any time, for the moment that a flower reaches a high standard a demand is created that may unexpectedly exceed the supply.

The features of the balance of the market are: The increased demand for Beauties, stimulated by the supply, the best being occasionally sold in hundred lots at dozen prices; the scarcity of cattleyas, which are very scarce indeed; the healthy demand for Easter lilies, well merited by the quality of the offerings, and the temporary side-tracking of the gladiolus, for there is a lull in the supply of this standard summer flower.

There is a bit of trading in the smaller roses, chiefly Kaiserin, Killarney and Maryland. A few nice outdoor and some indoor carnations are obtainable, Boston Market in white, Climax and Ethel Crocker in pink, Afterglow in deeper shade, while Elbon has the field in red.



The decorative tritoma finds favor for window decorations, while the coloring of the earlier Hydrangea paniculata opens for it a broader field.

The Convention.

The Philadelphians who were fortunate in attending the convention in Rochester last week are all enthusiastic in their praise of the Flower City and its people. The Rochester florists can have the satisfaction of knowing that all they did for the comfort and pleasure of their guests was fully appreciated by each and every one.

J. Otto Thilow praised the business ability displayed in the exhibition hall arrangements and in the exhibits themselves; he especially enjoyed the trip through the parks. One of the best features was the interest shown by the ladies; 140 went on the auto trip. All enjoyed it; this is most important; where the ladies will go, their men will go. Geo. Parsons endorsed all Mr. Thilow said.

Robert Craig was at Norwood picking out crotons, but Duncan Macaw had a kind word for the Rochester boys. Leo Niessen thought it was a good convention, adding that the New York commission men assured him they are going to combine in opening a wholesale house in Philadelphia, where they will dump their cheap stuff. Mr. Niessen said he assured them they would be welcome.

B. Eschner thought the convention the best the society has had; he was pleased with the business done. Fred J. Michell wore one of his happy smiles when he talked of Rochester. Edward Reid enjoyed himself immensely, recalling many incidents with pleasure. His friend, E. L. Tanner, of Richmond, Va., was delighted with his first convention. Sydney Bayersdorfer had a fine time and did a lot of business. "My grip was heavy with orders." When Phil smiled he added: "Indeed, I am not joking." So you see these instances show how everybody felt. It is only necessary to add that Wm. Robertson has something to show you.

A Foreign Rose Letter.

The following extract from a letter written by a Philadelphian, now in Switzerland, may be of interest to rosarians, especially as several of the varieties named are well known here:

"When in London we went to see the rose show. It was just as wonderful as before. I was only able to visit one tent, my strength being exhausted. After putting me in a hansom, G. returned and spent several hours looking at the roses. He found one tent full of new seedling roses that were most beautiful and interesting. Two yellow ones he particularly admired, and he is now corresponding with two rose growers, one in England and the other in Lyons, France, from whom he hopes to procure some of these new kinds.

"Among those that I saw was a very dark, rich colored red rose called Victor Hugo. Another, named Joseph Hill, was salmon pink, shaded yellow; it was extra large, and handsome both in color and form. Two others that I thought remarkably beautiful were Le Progres and the Lyon rose—the former a golden yellow, the latter shaded salmon and red.

"There was another flower show, at Holland House, where the private garden was on this day thrown open to the public. There was a wide walk down the middle of the garden, and on either side a bed about 300 feet long, six bushes in breadth, of Caroline Testout roses in full bloom—a magnificent sight.

"Both of these shows were attended by many thousands of people. The English, as a nation, take much more interest in flowers than we do. G. had

Paul Berkowitz, of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., has returned from a fortnight's sojourn by the sea, looking as though he had been a most popular summer man.

Richard Umphried went out of the usual in his vacation, spent in Bermuda, which Mr. Umphried declared is nice in summer; a pleasant sail and many sights of interest.

Walter P. Stokes returned last week enthusiastic over the cordial reception by the European seedsmen given to Mr. Willard and himself. When asked about valley, Mr. Stokes would only give a joyous laugh.

Charles E. Meehan returned from the lakes August 22.

Samuel S. Pennock is leaving for Halifax, Nova Scotia, as this paper goes to press.

Edward Aschmann and Howard Aschmann obtained possession of their new place at Second and Bristol streets, August 20.

John D. Cooper, Richmond, Va., was a visitor here recently.

William Ford, formerly member of Ford Bros., is calling on the Philadelphia growers preparatory to re-entering the wholesale arena in New York.

Real flowers are being worn at Newport this summer.

E. L. Tanner, of Ratcliffe & Tanner, Richmond, Va., spent a few days in this city as the guest of Edward Reid on his way home from the convention. Mr. Tanner expects to occupy his handsome new building in Richmond by September 15.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The market last week was in a fairly good condition, with plenty of stock to go around. The demand was not rushing; still, stock moved as well as could be expected at this time of the year. The demand is mostly for white flowers, as the retailers report that funeral work is about all the business that is going on and some days not even that.

Our wholesalers are in the midst of alterations and all expect to be fully prepared by September 15 to handle all the trade that comes their way. The stock seen is not of the best quality at present. Gladioli are slowing up and tuberoses are arriving in big lots. There is not the usual glut of asters, but they seem to clean up pretty well each day.

Roses are soft, but the best sell well. The same can be said of carnations. Giganteum lilies sell well and the demand for greens has been good.

Various Notes.

Most of those who represented St. Louis at the S. A. F. meeting at Rochester last week are loud in their praise of the hospitality of the Rochester florists. The election of our friend, George Asmus, as president of the S. A. F. was well received here, as he has a host of friends in the local trade. Baltimore, too, suits us as the next meeting place, for we can feel sure of being in good hands when we attend the next S. A. F. meeting.

Sam Freund, representing A. A. Arnold, Chicago, called on the trade here last week, with florists' folding box specialties.

T. W. Carlton, of Alvin, Tex., was a visitor last week. Mr. Carlton is a big shipper of cape jasmines to this market in season.

Frank Weber says that the members of the club should not forget to bring the ladies to the next meeting, which takes place on their grounds Thursday afternoon, September 8.

Guy M. Reyburn, of Chicago, was in town last week, making the rounds of the trade.

W. P. Stark, of Louisiana, Mo., president of the American Association of Nurserymen, spent a few days here recently. Mr. Stark says he will be here quite often between now and next June, in the interests of his association, which holds its meeting here next June.

Charles Schoenle is away on a three weeks' trip for his health and the much needed rest will do him a world of good.

A. Brix, of the A. Brix Floral Co., says that they are remodeling their heating system at their Mead avenue plant. Their aster crop has been a failure this season.

HARDINESS OF BOXWOOD TREES.

Will you kindly let me know whether boxwood trees are hardy and tell me something in regard to the nature of them? Do they require much water? I have some small trees, about sixteen inches high, but do not understand the care of them. D. E. M.

The common boxwood, Buxus sempervirens, is hardy, even in many of the colder states, especially if given a little winter covering to prevent scorching of the foliage. Many old gardens in the east contain quite large hedges and bushes of this dense but slow-growing evergreen, and 10 to 15 degrees below zero has injured them but little when they have had a covering of snow. If your plants are in pots or tubs, they should be placed in a shed, pit or light cellar, where the temperature keeps at the freezing point or a little above or below it through the winter, moving them outdoors about the last of April. They require an abundant water supply in summer; in winter one or two waterings will suffice. If your box trees are planted out, you can protect them with spruce or other evergreen boughs after December, but it will be safer to dig them up and store in a cold pit for the winter. C.

Club Meeting.

An advance meeting was called for August 11, to give the local florists who expected to attend the Rochester convention a chance to be present at the installation of officers of the New Orleans Horticultural Society. The business meeting was on this occasion restricted to the most important routine matters. The newly installed officers are: President, Richard Eichling; vice-president, R. E. Simon; secretary, C. R. Panter; treasurer, John Eblen.

Otto Haake and Max Scheneinuck sent in their applications for membership.

After the meeting was adjourned, the members retired to a cool and cozy little private dining room in Kolb's German Tavern. Following a time-honored custom, the newly installed officers invited all present to a cold supper, spread most temptingly on flower-bedecked boards. The president called on A. Alost, who recently returned from an extended trip through western Europe, and he expressed himself enthusiastically in regard to the advancement he had observed in everything pertaining to horticulture in the countries he had visited. Further speech-making was dispensed with and merrymaking was then in order.

During the general rejoicing the ever hard-working secretary, C. R. Panter, announced that so far $2,000 had been subscribed by members of the New Orleans Horticultural Society as a contribution to the Panama Exposition fund, and by his eloquent appeal to the brother florists he added three more subscribers to the list.

It was a late hour when the party separated, assuring their hosts that the occasion would linger long and pleasantly in their memories. Those present were: Richard Eichling, R. E. Simon, C. R. Panter, John Eblen, Harry Papworth, H. E. Dressel, A. Alost, U. J. Virgin, Paul Abele, F. St. Mard, J. A. Newsham, Claude Ory, Charles Eble, B. E. Eble, Theodore Betz, Robert Lockerbie, H. Rehfeld, Joseph Steckler, E. Baker, F. A. Despommier, F. Collongue, M. M. de Lapouyade and Herman C. Doescher.

Various Notes.

The following florists went to Rochester to attend the convention: Harry Papworth, Mr. and Mrs. U. J. Virgin and son, Charles Eble, B. M. Wichers and H. E. Dressel. Charles Eble took with him several cases of Phœnix Roebelenii, all fine, home-grown specimens, which attracted a great deal of attention and found ready buyers. From information received, all are unanimous in their praise of the success of the convention, the hospitality of the different florists, and, last but not least, their endeavor to bring the Panama Exposition and the S. A. F. convention to the beautiful Crescent City.

The Market.

There is not much to say about business, except that it is good one day, poor the next day. There is just about enough good stock to take care of what trade there is, and no means of using the poor stock, such as short roses, asters and the poorer colored gladioli.

The help around the stores have about all had their vacations and are getting back to work, and it is hard for them to put in their time.

Various Notes.

Uncle John Wyland was again called upon to do the good Samaritan act. An Italian was waylaid near his home one night last week. Uncle John provided first aid to the injured and had the man sent to the hospital.

Albert Lorch is enjoying his fine auto and is frequently seen on the Allison Park pike.

Seed Trade News

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

TOMATO promises to be a fair crop this year.

THERE is likely to be enough sweet corn to go around.

TEXAS seedsmen say fall business has begun, with every prospect for a record season.

MIGNONETTE is selling well; many cut flower growers who had dropped it are taking it up again.

THE weather of the last week has been exceptionally favorable in the western corn section.

FRED S. PETERSON, buyer for James Vick's Sons, Rochester, is spending a short vacation at Elizabeth, N. J., and in and about New York city.

THE new building of the Reichardt & Schulte Co., Houston, Tex., is nearing completion and will be occupied early in September. New fixtures are being installed throughout.

THE Holmes Seed Co., Harrisburg, Pa., is attracting large numbers of visitors this week with a gladiolus exhibition, using cut spikes from Arthur Cowee, Berlin, N. Y.

THE Wing & Bros. Seed Co., of Mechanicsburg, O., is enlarging its seed house so as to meet increasing demands. The entire plant is of concrete construction, and fireproof.

W. T. LOGAN, manager of the retail store of Crosman Bros., Rochester, cut short a vacation trip through central New York that he might assist in entertaining the S. A. F. convention last week.

LEWIS ATWOOD, the seedsman of Winterport, Me., has bought a large building on Washington street formerly owned by his brother, the late Fred Atwood, and will use it in connection with his business.

FRED B. KING, president of Mandeville & King Co., Rochester, N. Y., returned August 19 from a fishing trip in the Georgian bay district. The tan and sunburn and a fresh supply of stories indicate that the vacation was thoroughly enjoyed.

DUTY ON SWISS CHARD.

On a protest by Comstock, Ferre & Co., Wethersfield, Conn., the board of general appraisers has ruled that Swiss chard pays 4 cents per pound under the present tariff law. An importation through the port of Hartford was assessed 10 cents per pound as seeds not specially provided for, but was claimed to be dutiable under the provision in the same paragraph for beet seed. The protest was sustained.

HYACINTH CASE DECIDED.

The United States general appraisers have decided that "Hyacinth bulbs are dutiable under the provision in paragraph 263, tariff act of 1909, for 'hyacinth, astilbe, dielytra, and lily of the valley clumps, at $2.50 per thousand,' and not under the last provision in the paragraph for 'all other bulbs, bulbous roots or corms which are cultivated for their flowers or foliage,' at 50 cents per thousand."

This is in the matter of the protest of Joseph Breck & Sons, Boston, which has attracted much attention in the trade. The protest was filed last season, when the 1909 shipments came in under the new tariff law, and was first reported in The Review for February 24, as follows: "At Boston recently Mr. Keur and customers there raised the point at the custom house that hyacinth bulbs should be admitted at 50 cents per thousand under the provision for bulbs not specified. The contention was that the clause, 'Hyacinth, astilbe, dielytra, lily of the valley clumps, $2.50 per thousand,' should be interpreted literally; that is, as applying to hyacinth clumps, or, in other words, to the mother bulb with the clump of offsets. The contention may get up to the board of general appraisers, but it is doubtful if it can be made to stick."

Testimony was heard by the board of general appraisers, May 4, and under date of August 12, General Appraiser Waite says:

"The goods in question are hyacinth bulbs. It is conceded by both sides that they are dutiable under paragraph 263, tariff act of 1909, but each contends that classification should be made under a different clause thereof. The paragraph, in so far as pertinent hereto, reads as follows:

263. * * * Hyacinth, astilbe, dielytra, and lilly of the valley clumps, $2.50 per thousand; * * * all other bulbs, bulbous roots or corms which are cultivated for their flowers or foliage, 50 cents per thousand.

"These bulbs were assessed at $2.50 per thousand under the clause first above quoted; the importers claim they should be dutiable at 50 cents per thousand under the last clause of the paragraph, as quoted above.

"It will be observed that the question involved is purely one of construction of this statute to determine the meaning of the law. Hyacinths are expressly provided for, whether in one form or another, under the provision of paragraph 263, first quoted above. If hyacinths are to be assessed under the last clause of the paragraph, as claimed by the importers, it is because they are included in the general provision for 'all other bulbs or bulbous roots or corms which are cultivated for their flowers.' After a careful consideration of the statute, and all things in the record pertinent thereto, we have come to the conclusion that the word 'hyacinth' in said paragraph should not be considered an adjective qualifying 'clumps,' and hence was intended to cover hyacinths in the form here imported as a separate and distinct grade or class of bulbs. The protest is therefore overruled."

The position taken by the appraisers was supported by the evidence of Harry A. Bunyard, with Arthur T. Boddington; J. B. Clark, with Henry A. Dreer; A. M. Kirby, with Peter Henderson & Co.; George Stumpp, of Stumpp & Walter Co.; Mr. Wilson, with J. M. Thorburn & Co.; G. C. Eldering, of W. J. Eldering & Son; L. C. Corbett and others who were subpœnaed for the hearing May 4.

ALLOW FOR DIRT IN SEEDS.

In sustaining the protest of the Baker Castor Oil Co., New York, the board of general appraisers has decided that an allowance of five per cent for dirt, gravel or other foreign substances should be made on an importation of 1,358 bags of castor seeds or beans.

Paragraph 266 of the tariff act of 1909 provides for castor seeds or beans at 25 cents per bushel of fifty pounds. The corresponding paragraph of the previous tariff act provided for the seeds at the same rate, but further provided that "no allowance should be made for dirt or other impurities in such seeds." The omission from the new tariff act of this provision disallowing any deduction for dirt or impurities was, according to the board, manifestly intentional on the part of congress, and left the question of such allowance to be determined in accordance with law.

The importers claimed in their protest that in determining the number of pounds or bushels on which to assess duty the collector should have made an allowance for dirt, gravel or other foreign substances amounting, as was alleged, to about 4.99 per cent. The merchandise had been purchased from Fairclough, Dodd & Jones, of London. The association called the Oil Seed Association of London makes it a business to examine and test all seeds which have to be shipped. Its report, according to the board, evidenced by a certificate admitted in evidence and marked Exhibit 1, seems to have been made the basis of the sale of the goods and, as it were, a controlling factor between the seller and the buyer. In other words, it was a part of the res gestæ of the sale, indicating that it was a sale of so many bags of seed, less impurities of about five per cent.

General Appraiser Somerville, who wrote the decision for the board, after mentioning a previous similar case before the supreme court wherein the flaxseed in question contained dust composed of clay, sand and gravel to an average of four per cent, stated:

"It was held by the supreme court that an allowance should be made by way of deduction of duty from the gross weight of the goods of this per cent of impurities. It would make no difference, in our opinion, between that case and the one under consideration that the amount of impurities in the previous case was admitted or disputed. There can be no difference in its probative force between a fact admitted and a fact proved, such admission being only a mode of proof. While this decision of the supreme court has been criticised to some extent by inferior tribunals, it has never been overruled. GROWING BEAN STOCK SEED.

In growing stock seed of garden beans, says W. W. Tracy in a recent government bulletin, the first requisite is a very clear conception of what constitutes an ideal plant of the sort, and this should extend to all of its parts, for often the first indication of accidental crossing which will ultimately ruin the stock is some slight change of no economic importance. In the bean plant the result of crossing is seldom seen in the seed, and sometimes is not noticeable in any part of the plants which are the immediate product of the cross. Generally, crossing is first manifested in some inconspicuous way, such as in the size or the color of the flower, in the form or the tint of the marking of the seed, or in the shape or the color of the point of the pod; but these are premonitions of changes in subsequent generations which will render the stock worthless and which it will be practically impossible to eradicate by the most careful roguing.

HENRY A. DREER, Inc., 714 Chestnut Street PHILADELPHIA, PA.

In starting a foundation stock one should most carefully select a few plants which in habit of growth, in leaf, flower, pod, and in every way are of the exact varietal character wanted. The seed of these selections may, with reasonable safety, be planted side by side, but each plant should be carefully examined, and the whole of any lot in which a single plant shows variation that seems to have come through the seed rather than as a result of more or less perfect development should be rejected, and it is often wise to reject all of the stock that traces to the same original selected plant. In making such rejections it is very important that one should distinguish between variations which were transmitted through the seed and those which result from conditions of growth and which would not be carried in the seed. This will call for the exercise of wise judgment founded on a full and accurate knowledge of the varietal characteristics of the sort. It will be seen that in spite of the lesser liability to cross-fertilization, the building up of a true stock is a much slower process with beans than with corn, but when one which is true has been secured it is much easier to keep it so.

The water from the special nozzles comes from overhead in a mist—sprays the plants like a gentle rainfall—that will not injure the most delicate leaves and blossoms.

The ground does not cake and crack, but keeps soft and porous, letting in the air necessary to the rapid growth of plants. The labor saved in one year will pay for the entire cost of the System.

tremely small. Roses retailed at $1 and $1.50 per dozen. Sweet peas for about two weeks fell off in blooming, but they have been doing well lately; 50 cents per hundred blooms was the general retail price. Gladioli were in good supply and retailed at $1 per dozen. Outdoor flowers were plentiful and there was a wide variety to choose from. Funeral work was good and called for immense quantities of stock.

The weather has been cool and pleasant for the last few weeks, and everything outside has been growing nicely.

Various Notes.

Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Chamberlain left Monday, August 15, for a two weeks' trp to Bethlehem, N. H.

Julius Rositzsky, manager for Wm. P. Peirce, had an enjoyable week's vacation in this vicinity and expected to spend another week or so around Philadelphia in the near future. Mr. Peirce reports a good week of business. His is one of the up-to-date stores of the town.

James H. Cleary, who had a store on Pleasant street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy. His liabilities are $2,783; assets, $1,802.

F. S. Treadup is bringing in some nice Queen of the Market asters.

Geo. N. Borden, foreman for R. H. Woodhouse, will leave soon for a two weeks' vacation at Lake Winnipesaukee, N. H.

Nearly every Sunday the local newspapers give illustrated accounts of the garden work being done in the school garden contests. Great credit is due some of the youngsters.

S. S. Peckham is growing large blocks of mums. He will be in fine shape for the coming season's work. One of the main features of his place is an up-to-date machine and power plant, run by a ten horse-power Columbus gasoline engine.

Stores still close early, and on Wednesdays at noon. W. L.

Selma, Ala.—William Eickenroth, of the Park Floral Co., has leased the greenhouses of the Selma Street & Suburban Railway Co.

The Market.

An improved tone is now noticeable all around and the near termination of the vacation season is galvanizing more activity into the market. The most prominent flowers now are asters. In spite of our almost continuously dry summer, these are of fine quality and are bringing good prices. The leading varieties seen are Daybreak, Vick's Branching, Debutante, Comet and Ostrich Plume. Values now are as high as $3 for extra select flowers, down to 50 cents and 75 cents per hundred.

Gladioli are the next most prominent flowers at present. America continues the leader. There also is a fair call for white and scarlet shades, the latter including that good old variety, Brenchleyensis.

Sweet peas are not plentiful and there is a decided shortage of good pink colors. If the Boston market could secure such sweet peas as are grown at Bar Harbor, they would be eagerly snapped up.

Roses are coming in more freely and bring rather better prices, especially Killarney, Carnot, Maryland and Kaiserin. The old crop of carnations is practically over, but some of the new crop, both from outdoors and under glass, are arriving. As yet these are short-stemmed, but are selling well.

est terms of praise of their entertainment there and are unanimous in pronouncing the meeting the best ever held. We look to see a record attendance in Boston on the occasion of the coming national show and convention and Massachusetts should show a substantial increase in S. A. F. membership before that time.

Those who want to see Scotch heather, Calluna vulgaris, at home and blooming finely should visit Forest Hills cemetery. The genial superintendent gardener, T. H. Westwood, ex-president of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston, has a hillside resembling a miniature scene in the Scotch highlands. The subtropical effects here are unusually good. Mr. Westwood is a past master with this class of bedding. One clump of 2,000 Begonia gracilis is a beautiful sight and there are many other effects equally good, geraniums blooming with unusual profusion.

Edward MacMulkin has had excellent summer business at his Boylston street store. August 18 he had a decoration of orchids for President Taft, which he found some difficulty in procuring, there being a decided scarcity of these flowers at present.

The two wholesale flower markets are busy cleaning up their stalls preparatory to the auction sales. That of the Boston Flower Exchange, at C Park street, occurs August 27, while the Boston Co-operative Flower Market has its sale September 3. Elijah Cartwright is president and John McFarland secretary of the latter market and there is every likelihood that the sales will considerably exceed those of any previous year. Business has been extra good since moving to 2 Park street.

Mann Bros., of Randolph, among their other specialties are selling quantities of extra fine dahlias, cosmos, salpiglossis and lilies in variety at their stalls at C Park street.

P. J. Rogean is handling some extremely good gladioli and asters at C Park street, the production of Paul E. Richwagen.

James Tulis, of South Sudbury, was one of the first in the market with extra good outdoor grown carnations. He also has asters of first-class quality. The Sudbury soil seems particularly well adapted to the culture of these. Sam Beck makes an efficient salesman for Mr. Tulis' flowers.

The sum of $4,000,000 has been expended by the national government, states, cities and private individuals in fighting the gypsy and brown tail moths in New England since 1905. The greater part of this money, probably nine-tenths, has been spent in Massachusetts, yet in spite of increased efforts at suppression the infested area continues to grow and now exceeds 7,900 square miles. The fight promises to be a long, hard and costly one and the greatest hope lies in the increase of parasite foes to a point where they can control the pests, as in Europe.

Bloomsburg, Pa.—The greenhouses of the J. L. Dillon estate, which are among the largest and best in this part of the state, were established in a comparatively small way by the late J. L. Dillon in 1875. The original houses are located near the Normal school, and as they stand today make a group of twelve, comprising something over 40,000 square feet of glass. Seventeen years ago the houses on Fifth street were commenced and these have been added to from time to time until now they contain over 100,000 square feet of glass. The business is conducted by Mrs. Dillon, assisted by her son, M. G. Dillon.

City Nursery Co., New Haven, Conn., where the association met for a field day, August 11. After spending a pleasant morning exploring the nurseries, the members took the trolley to Savin Rock, Connecticut's Coney Island. There they partook of a well-served dinner at the Colonnade, and then, as they themselves expressed it, they "played kids" for the remainder of the day, visiting all the shows, from the roller coaster to the flying horses.

It was voted unanimously that the day had been most pleasantly spent.

The Market.

The weather has turned even colder than when last reported, and we have hardly seen the sun for two weeks. Whether this is against the best interests of the trade or not, is hard to say, but it is favorable to the handling of flowers of all kinds. Never at this season of the year have the blossoms of all kinds been in such profusion and of such good quality. The new crop of Carnot roses shows better color and substance and less thrips than is often seen in August. For all of this we can thank the excess of cool, cloudy weather with which we have been blessed for the last month.

The prices of all kinds of stock show an upward tendency, and, with the exception of asters and a few kinds of outside stock, everything is quickly bought up. Amaryllis has come into town in large bunches, but does not find ready sale. Lilium rubium and album are in full crop at present and move well. They cost the stores from $1.50 to $2.50 per dozen. Valley is fairly plentiful again and sells for the usual price. Mums are on the way, but not yet in full supply. The stock of this flower looks well and the chances are good for an abundant crop.

Although business is not brisk, it is much better than it has been at any time this summer, and the indications point to its continued improvement.

Various Notes.

T. J. Thompson, son of the well-known florist of Santa Cruz, Cal., is in town, with the intention of permanently locating here.

C. A. Parker, of Fruitvale, will construct a fern house, 16x50 feet, within the next few weeks.

W. O. Young, of Berkeley, believes he has originated several new berries of considerable commercial value.

O. Holm, of Golden Gate park, who was badly injured by a hold-up man last week, is on the road to recovery and expects to resume work in a couple of weeks.

The Elmhurst Floral Co. has removed to its new store recently erected on the site of the former building, on Twelfth street, Oakland.

E. W. McLellan & Co., of Burlingame, are busy at this time preparing their houses for the coming season. G.

Charles Abrahams, of the Western Nursery, has found it necessary to build more greenhouses. During the last few weeks he has been busy transplanting his collection of succulents, which are among the finest in California.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

Considering that we are in the midst of the dull season, business is fair. It is a noticeable fact that right along there has been quite a bit of funeral work. Every week there have been funerals in prominent families.

The supply of asters is increasing from day to day, and some improvement in quality is seen. Thus, with the increased supply, the poorer grades hung fire last week, while all good stock was cleaned up. Lilies are not so plentiful as of late, and find ready sale. Roses are about equal to the demand. The green goods market is well supplied. There are plenty of gladioli to fill all orders.

Various Notes.

The staff of the Baumgarten Floral Co. say that, considering there is never much doing during July and August, they are well satisfied with the run of things thus far. Funeral work with them has been one of the main items.

At the store of the Edlefsen-Leidiger Co. the old front has been removed to make way for a more modern one. Miss Rose Semler, vice-president of the firm, reported for duty on Monday, August 22, after a four weeks' vacation.

Our representatives at the Rochester convention returned Saturday evening, and they have only words of praise in regard to the exhibitions, entertainments and general run of affairs. J. E. Matthewson, of Sheboygan, who went with our boys, also came back with them.

Wm. Zimmermann left Tuesday, August 23, for St. Louis, Mo., to attend the Eagles' convention. As there are several former Milwaukee boys down there, he undoubtedly will see all there is to be seen and forget all about getting homesick.

Oscar Kuehn, of St. Louis, Mo., with his wife and family, spent last week in our city, visiting Mr. Kuehn's parents. It was quite a pleasant surprise, as the scribe had not seen him for nearly ten years.

Other visitors during the week were: Mr. Sinner, of Sinner Bros., of Rogers Park, Ill.; Adam Zender, also of Rogers Park, and Mrs. J. T. Hinchliffe, of Racine, Wis.

EVANSVILLE, IND.

The Market.

Business is not extra good at present, but all are in hopes of better conditions later. The weather was extremely warm last week and the roses and carnations are soft. Asters are nothing extra and not many of these are seen.

Various Notes.

Ben Kramer reports that business is quite good. Mrs. Kramer is spending her vacation at Devils Lake, Wis., and is delighted with the scenery.

Royston & Fenton are just beginning to cut from the young stock. The roses are short-stemmed, but of fairly good quality.

At the greenhouses of Julius Niednagel & Sons the carnations are getting a good start. The roses being carried over are breaking well; the young shoots have that nice, red appearance so much desired on new growth. John Murphy, rose grower for this firm, has resigned his position. The firm loses a good grower, for Mr. Murphy has been highly successful. E. L. F.

Vincennes, Ind.—W. A. Reiman is building a large packing and cooling room in which to handle his next year's peony crop. He will increase his field to fourteen acres this autumn. Peonies always bloom here for Decoration day.

Kingston, R. I.—About a mile out on the Perryville road, L. F. Kenney has a notable collection of rhododendrons. He has about 200 acres on which he raises stock for sale, but he also buys the native stock growing on neighboring tracts, usually stipulating that he shall have from three to five years to remove the plants, taking all that there are on the tract.

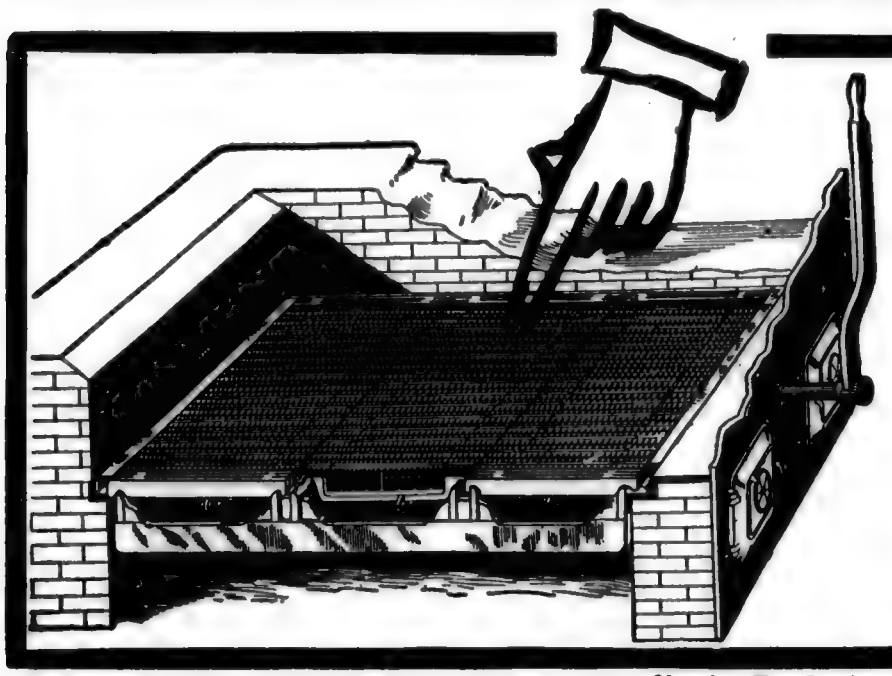
REX BEGONIAS.

We have a batch of Rex begonias, on which the leaves become blighted. The plants seem to be in good shape, but before the leaf is fully matured it is blighted and dies. At first we thought it was on account of water getting on the leaves and the sun burning them, so a number were set aside for special treatment, but with no better results. Can you advise us? H. E. D. G.

It is an old but utterly erroneous idea that water on the leaves of Rex begonias is injurious, exactly the reverse being the case. The plants, however, should not be grown in the full sun. If in such an exposure, with water on the foliage, some scalding would probably result. These begonias want a shaded house or frame. If you have not a suitable greenhouse, shade one or two sashes on a coldframe and place your plants under them. They will make rapid growth here. A light, moderately rich soil suits them, and when the pots are full of roots feed with liquid manure once a week. C. W.

WHERE TO GROW FREESIAS.



Would it be better to plant freesias in five inches of soil in benches, in four inches of soil in flats, or in 6-inch pots?
P. C. M.

Six-inch pots will give the finest spikes, but, of course, this method entails more watering. While freesias will do well in benches, I have never seen as fine spikes grown in this way as in flats; in addition, the disadvantage of the bench system is that the freesias occupy the space to the entire exclusion of all other plants for so long a period. Pots and flats can be moved around at will. They do specially well on shelves in any house where a night temperature of 50 degrees is maintained in winter, and where the head room is sufficient. The finest freesias I ever grew were in 10-inch and 12-inch pans stood on a carnation house shelf, saucers being provided after the pans were well filled with roots. C. W.

NAME OF PLANT.

I am sending you under separate cover a specimen of a species of fern which we have found growing in our greenhouse with the adiantums. Will you kindly give me the name of it?
J. M. A.

The plant in question is Selaginella Kraussiana, also known as S. denticulata, a species that has long been in cultivation and is frequently used for carpeting beneath other plants.

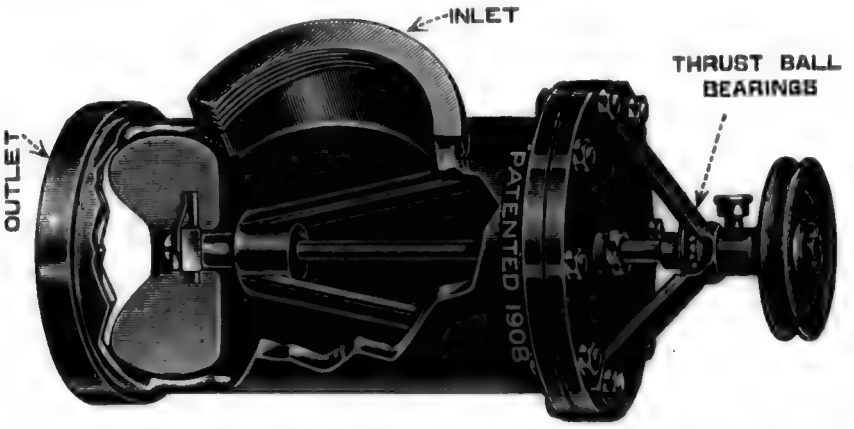
Greenhouse Heating.

THERE is no change in the situation in the coal market. The miners have voted overwhelmingly to go on with the strike and there is no immediate prospect of the resumption of operations in the Illinois fields. The only sure thing in the coal business is that scarcity and high prices will rule the markets this winter. Growers should not lose a moment in filling their sheds to their greatest capacity.

STEAM FOR TWO HOUSES.

I enclose a sketch of a proposed steam system. You would greatly oblige me by your criticism of this system. I wish to maintain a temperature of 60 degrees in coldest Chicago weather. There are two houses, one 27x100 and the other 29x100. The walls are seven feet high to the gutters, and three of the gables are exposed. I intend to use a 2½-inch pressure reducing valve and a No. 1 Morehead trap. The boiler is forty-five horse-power. P. R.

The sketch shows fifteen 1¼-inch pipes in each of the houses, and, counting six feet of radiation for each foot of glass for 60 degrees, this seems ample for the purpose. The method of arranging the pipe under the benches distributes it quite evenly and should give good results.



OREGON CARNATION HOUSES.

I have two small greenhouses, each 20x60, for the growing of carnations, and am installing in them a hot water plant, with four 2-inch returns in each house, carried along the benches. Would it be better to use a 2½-inch or a 3-inch flow, under the ridge, in each house? A. P.

Ordinarily it would be advisable to

The "Ideal" Hot Water Circulator

THE "IDEAL" is the simplest and most efficient circulator on the market; requiring less power to operate than any other.

Sectional Cut of Improved Circulator No. 6.

Some Advantages of the "Ideal" Circulator.

(1) Improves to perfection the circulation in hot water plants that are defective.
(2) Enables present hot water systems to be extended to a very large extent without increasing the size of the pipes or the height of the circulating head.
(3) Owing to the reduced size of the main piping required, it considerably reduces the first cost of installation.
(4) Gives an even temperature in the pipes throughout the system.
(5) Reduces the amount of radiating pipes required.
(6) Enables smaller piping to be used.
(7) Piping may be placed below boiler level as well as above.
(8) Effects a large economy in cost of fuel.
(9) Requires a very small amount of power to operate (1-10 of one horse power is sufficient for 5,000 sq. ft. of heating surface).
(10) Can be used as an auxiliary to gravity system, and does not impede the flow of same at times when forced circulation is not required.

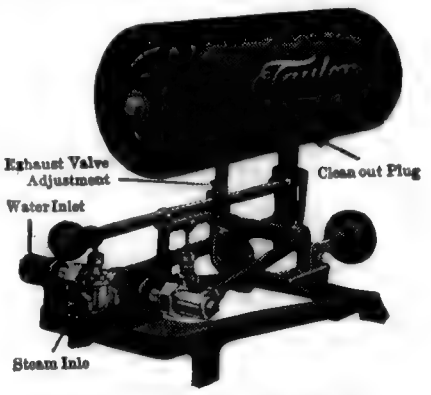
use two 2½-inch flows and seven or eight 2-inch returns in a carnation house 20x60 feet, but where the minimum temperature is never as low as zero it might suffice to use even less than six 2-inch returns. While one 3-inch flow would answer, I should prefer to use two 2½-inch flow pipes.



PIPING IN MISSOURI.

I have one greenhouse, 28x44. The boiler is in the southwest corner of the building and five feet below the walks. It is heated as follows: One 3-inch flow from the south to the north, returning in fourteen 2-inch pipes. This is not quite satisfactory. The pipes are made up into radiators, which are located under the beds. The house has concrete walls, with three feet of glass in the east wall and five and one-half feet of glass in the west wall. There is also glass in the south end. The total height of the walls is five feet on the east side and eight feet on the west. The height to the ridge is twelve feet. I use this house to grow a general stock of plants.

I wish to know what improvements could be made in the piping and whether I have enough piping for the radiation. I have left plugged tees, so that I can put radiators on both walls if necessary.

I expect to build a small house to the west, in the form of a lean-to, as that side is twelve feet high on the outside. This house will be 8x30. I shall also build a potting shed to the north, 14x24. How much piping will be required to heat these two to the proper temperature? I wish to use a bed in the lean-to for rooting cuttings. I will install a No. 2 Kroeschell boiler this year. E. A. M.

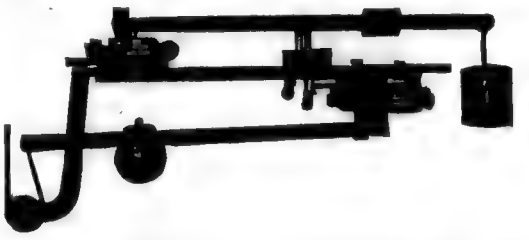
To heat the house 28x44 feet, with eight and one-half feet of glass in the walls, it would be best to use three 2½-inch mains and fifteen 2-inch returns, but as the 3-inch flow is now in use, it will answer if two additional 2½-inch mains are put in and the returns are divided between the flows.

For the proposed lean-to, 8x30 feet, use one 2-inch flow and four 2-inch returns. In the potting shed, 14x24 feet, use one 2½-inch flow and four 2-inch returns.

CHANGING BOILERS.



I intend to make a change in my boilers and should like to know if I can use one boiler in place of the three I have at present.

We have three houses, each 24x85 feet, all connected under the gutters, which are seven and one-half feet high. The ridges are fifteen feet high. We also have one house at the end of these, 20x150 feet and fifteen feet to the ridge, with a 5-foot wooden wall on the outside; also two houses, each 18x75 feet and eleven feet to the ridge, with 4½-foot wooden walls. The boilers are in the workshed at the ends of these houses.

At present we have the following piping in use in these houses: 2,600 lineal feet of 4-inch pipe, 300 feet of 2½-inch, 1,900 feet of 2-inch and 2,100 feet of 1½-inch. This heats our greenhouses satisfactorily.

We are using one cast-iron sectional boiler with a grate 30x30 inches, one with a grate 30x42 inches and one with a grate 24x30 inches. This last boiler is cracked and so we want to put in a large boiler in place of all the others. There is just twenty square feet of grate in the three boilers. We can get a return, tubular, firebox marine boiler of eighty horse-power, 5x12 feet, with forty-two 2-inch flues. The grate of this boiler is 4x5 feet. Will this boiler do the work of the three we have? We heat with hot water. J. N. C.

If three boilers, with a combined grate area of twenty square feet, will heat the houses, there should be no difficulty in heating them with one boiler having the same grate area as the three small boilers. Judging, also, from the radiation in the houses, the boiler will be of ample size.

A GERANIUM HOUSE.

I am building a greenhouse for the growing of geraniums and bedding plants. It is 20x50 feet and four feet to the eaves, with 18 inches of glass in the sides. It is ten feet six inches to the ridge. The walls are concrete. If I run two 2-inch flows overhead in the center, two feet below the ridge, with a rise to the farther end of the house, and then have them drop straight down, each flow going into a manifold and returning on the side walls with three 2-inch pipes to the boiler, would I get a good circulation and would that be sufficient piping to heat the house in this Pennsylvania climate? C. W. B.

If 60 degrees is desired in a house 20x50 feet, with eighteen inches of glass in each wall, about 450 square feet of radiation will be needed, and it will be best to use three 2½-inch flows and nine 2-inch returns. For 55 degrees, two flows and ten returns could be used.

It will be best to have the highest point in the system near the boiler, and if the expansion tank is attached at that point, no air cocks will be necessary. By giving the flow pipes a slight fall, a better circulation can be secured than when they run upward.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

There seems to be reason for indulging in the hope that the lowest ebb of midsummer dullness has passed. Business in cut flowers has again commenced. There is a steady demand for fancy asters and roses, but this demand has had a perceptible effect on several other varieties of flowers.

The market conditions differ from last week in that there are more really fine asters coming in, the quality of many of Semple's and Vick's leaving little to be desired. The flowers are large, firm and well colored, with long stems and good foliage. The outside stock of asters is a failure here, on account of the dry season.

Various Notes.

Everybody is home from the convention and all speak in glowing terms of the hospitality shown the party from Baltimore, which numbered forty-six. It was considered one of the best attended conventions ever held. The exhibits were excellent in every respect. The exhibit of gladioli far exceeded anything ever shown before.

The Baltimore florists were more than pleased with the election of Richard Vincent as vice-president of the S. A. F.

Q.

St. Joseph, Mo.—A party which included Frank Stuppy, of the Stuppy Floral Co., of this city, John Furrow, of Furrow & Co., Guthrie, Okla., Ernst Mueller and Carl Chesmore, seedsmen, of this city, and Kemper, Carter and Raymond Mueller, left this city Friday, August 19, in two automobiles, bound for Denver, Colo. Mr. Stuppy's car carried, besides himself and Mr. Furrow, 1,600 pounds of provisions and equipment, as it is the intention to camp out along the way and to hunt and fish through the Rocky mountains. The trip will cover a period of about three weeks, bringing the party back here early in September.

SOME BIG CUCUMBER HOUSES.

The Sunny Brook Distillery Co., of Louisville, Ky., which for some time has made the growing of cucumbers a part of its business, is now erecting three huge greenhouses at Jacksonville, Fla. One of the houses, indeed, will be a mammoth affair, 114x400 feet, one of the largest structures of the kind in the world. Besides this house, there will be two smaller ones, each 60x400 feet.

It is the intention of the owners to grow cucumbers exclusively, which are to be shipped directly to the New York market, for use in the most fashionable cafes and restaurants of the metropolis. The Sunny Brook distillery has for some time been operating plants of this character in all parts of the United States, and it is said to be the intention of the company to consolidate all of its plants at Jacksonville.

The construction, as well as the management of the plant when completed, will be under the able direction of R. L. Chamberlain, who formerly had charge of the company's greenhouses in Grand Rapids, Mich. He has had wide experience in this line of work. The smaller greenhouses are nearly completed, and work on the large one will begin at once. It is expected that the entire plant will be completed by the middle of November.

A large two-story building has been constructed, to be used for a packing house and for offices, and the plant will be modern and up-to-date in every detail.

The plant is to be known as the Sunny Brook Gardens.

MANURE FOR LETTUCE.

I should like to know what fertilizer can be used in place of cow manure for bench-grown lettuce, here in southeastern Michigan. A. A. F. & S.

If you cannot procure cow manure conveniently, sheep manure, which should be procurable at a moderate price in your section, will answer well. Failing either of the foregoing manures, well decayed horse manure will be found satisfactory. I am acquainted with a number of first-class lettuce growers who use nothing but horse manure. C. W.

Greensburg, Ind.—Dille & Konzelman report that their new range of 20,000 square feet of glass is now completed. About one-half the space is planted to Killarney, White Killarney, Bride and Maid, the other half being devoted to carnations. They say the stock is in fine shape and will be ready for market soon.

A PERFECT GREENHOUSE HOSE

FURNISHED in continuous lengths of 500 feet. An exceptionally high grade hose manufactured with a woven jacket insertion instead of cotton duck, and with specially selected rubber in the inner tube and cover.

The woven jacket construction makes a stronger hose than can be obtained from cotton duck, and absolutely precludes the possibility of cover opening at seam—a common cause of failure of hose made on cotton duck. This construction also gives a more flexible hose and reduces the possibility of kinking.

"Magic" Hose is guaranteed to stand a pressure of 500 pounds per square inch, although its bursting pressure is far in excess of this.

Combination of Greenhouse and Garage

Here is an idea for you—it's a good one. Attach your greenhouse to the garage and then the one heating plant can heat them both. In this one of Mr. W. H. Chesebrough's at Spring Lake, N. J., the gardener, J. D. MacGregor, has snug, comfortable rooms over the garage, making a handy fix for him and his family.

You see that the house is our new Curved Eave Construction, which is remarkable for its great lightness.

You need have no misgivings as to the durability of any feature, as the construction is our Sectional Iron Frame Construction, with the Curved Eave, and with sill and gutter combined in one casting.

Gardeners, send for our Special Curved Eave Circular. It tells you just the things you want to know—It is illustrated in colors.

HERE is an example of what a little simple treatment will do to make a greenhouse additionally attractive. The half-timbered effect of workroom and greenhouse sides is most effective in combination with the Curved Eave Construction.

KING IRON FRAME GREENHOUSES

"Ask the Man Who Has One"

Letter from W. J. Palmer & Son, two years after adopting the new construction—

We have now had your Iron Frame Construction in use in our new carnation range for two years, and have found it entirely satisfactory, amply strong, and at the same time casting the minimum amount of shade.

We have in the past largely used the flat rafter type of iron frame house, but adopted the King Type on its merits and not on the question of price, though quotations we received for the flat iron rafter houses were 40 per cent higher than yours.

We consider the Iron Frame House the best, and believe that you have promoted the best interests of growers by introducing a superior type of Iron Frame Construction, which is so reasonable in price that there is no longer any excuse for the building of either cheap wooden houses or expensive types of iron frame houses.

Wishing you every success, we remain, Yours respectfully,
W. J. PALMER & SON.

How to Save Money

No. 4

TAKE advice where it is good. The makers of greenhouse material are designing houses every day for all kinds of stock and purposes and they know what the growers in various parts of the country are doing. Everything new in construction and every advantage in building comes to their notice. You can many times save much money by asking for this advice before building. Your houses may not be operating as economically as they should and you may not get all the stock you should from your benches. Before you put up that new house write us for some information about construction.
